PREFACE.

THIS edition of The Amphitruo is intended as a companion volume to my friend Professor Tyrrell's edition of the Miles Gloriosus. In attempting, to the best of my ability, to carry on the work so well begun, I have the satisfaction of finding that my views on the chief points in dispute among Plautine critics coincide in the main, so far as they are fully formed, with those of Professor Tyrrell, so that I have been able to construct the book on the same lines as his Miles. I say, so far as my views are fully formed : for whereas I have been able to arrive at a decided opinion on many points, there are others on which I confess I am still in a state of ἐποχή. There is no author about whom it is more risky to dogmatize than Plautus : no author concerning whose text the critic may more truly remark :

γηράσκω δ' αἰεὶ πολλὰ διδασκόμενος.

The reader will observe at once that Bentley's system of accentuation is not adopted throughout this edition. It is only used at the beginning of scenes : at the beginning of a new metre : in the rarer metres : and where the scansion is likely to cause the reader to pause. For instance, I employ an accent over a monosyllable when unelided in the first syllable of a resolved arsis, as :

Verum periclitatus súm animum bonum.

On the other hand I have adopted Ritschl's mark for synizesis or synaeresis, ^v over a vowel, as méam, or, when we may suppose a diphthong was sounded, [^], as quoûus. By this means the student often gets information where Bentley's system is useless or even childish : for instance 1. 2. 15 :

atque insimulabit éam probri ; tum meus pater.

By so printing the line the attention of the student is called to the fact that the third foot is not an anapaest ; such a division of an anapaest being illegitimate. By merely accentuating the line as an Iambic trimeter the reader learns nothing. This system has to a limited extent been adopted by Leo : I have used it much more largely : and shall in future carry it out even more thoroughly.

I acknowledge very deep obligations to the critical apparatus of Messrs. Goetz and Loewe, which is the foundation of my own. It is hoped that the considerable additions to and omissions from it which I have made will appear to justify the free use I have made of their collation. Next to Goetz and Loewe, I am most indebted to Ussing's practical and serviceable edition, which is on the whole the best commentary on The Amphitruo existing. I have also made much use of Leo's text. Of editions of other plays, Tyrrell's Miles, Sonnenschein's Captivi and Mostellaria, and Brix's four plays have been constantly beside me.

Of other works relating to Plautus, the following have been most frequently consulted: W. Christ, Metrik der Griechen und Römer, ed. 2, 1879; Ritschl, Prolegomena to the Trinummus, 1848; C. F. W. Mueller, Plautinische Prosodie, 1869; A. Spengel, T. Maccius Plautus, 1865, and Reformvorschläge, 1882; O. Seyffert, De Bacchiacorum Versuum usu Plautino, 1864; A. Luchs, Quaestiones Metricae, 1873, and Commentationes Prosodiacae, 1883; F. Schmidt, Quaestiones de Pronominum Demonstrativorum Formis Plautinis, 1875; W. Studemund, De Canticis Plautinis, 1864; C. Rothe, Quaestiones Grammaticae, 1876.

I have added two Appendices. The first contains Spengel's arrangement of the Cantica in The Amphitruo as given in his Reformvorschläge: the second a selection of emendations in the text of Plautus which I have from time to time published in Hermathena and elsewhere. I hope these conjectures may not be without interest to the student: many of them touch on points treated in the Notes to The Amphitruo. In publishing these I take the opportunity of restoring to their proper parents some of their literary progeny which I had unintentionally kidnapped. It was not without separate pangs that I parted with aliquo saltu, Mil. 2. 2. 66, which is due to A. Kiessling: ovis, Pers. 2. 1. 6, which is claimed by O. Seyffert: and di iuvare, Cas. 2. 6. 65, which belongs to A. Spengel. One of the chief discouragements to the emendator is the fact that he so often finds his conjecture anticipated, not in any accessible edition, but in some recondite German periodical.

I desire to return my best thanks to Professor E. A. Sonnenschein, and to my friends and colleagues, Mr. L. C. Purser and Mr. J. I. Beare, for reading my proofs, and for many important suggestions and criticisms.

INTRODUCTION.

THE plot of The Amphitruo is, or rather was, as follows. Amphitruo and his newly-married wife are resident in Thebes.¹ Creon, the king of Thebes, has given Amphitruo the command of his army against the piratical Teleboae. Amphitruo departs leaving his wife pregnant. During his absence Jupiter becomes enamoured of Alcumena, and assumes the guise of Amphitruo, Mercury at the same time taking the dress and form of Amphitruo's slave, Sosia. Jupiter visits Alcumena, pretending that he has returned from the conquest of the Teleboae, tells her how he has slain their king, Pterelaus, with his own hand, and presents her with the golden goblet of Pterelaus. At the same time the night is preternaturally lengthened. Amphitruo having conquered the Teleboae, and returned by ship to the harbour of Thebes, sends Sosia forward at night to his house to give Alcumena tidings of his safe arrival. Sosia finds Mercury on the watch, and is driven away by him. Sosia returns to the harbour to his master, and tells him of his strange encounter with his second self, and how he was prevented coming near the house. Master and man set out together for the house of the former. Jupiter, as day is on the point of breaking, has just said farewell to Alcumena, and quitted the house. Amphitruo, to his wife's amazement, salutes her as though he had been long absent, and is thoroughly mystified by her assertion that he had spent the night with her. He is convinced of her infidelity, announces his intention of divorcing her, and determines to appeal to Naucrates, a relation of his wife and his fellow-passenger, whether her assertion is not utterly false.

The legend naturally supplied the writer with materials thus far, but the author of the play has added to and improved on the legend by the following particulars. Jupiter, not satisfied with the mystification of Amphitruo, returns to Alcumena, and tells her that all he (Amphitruo) had just reproached her with was said as a joke. While this interview is going on, Amphitruo approaches the house, having in vain sought everywhere for Naucrates. Mercury in the guise of Sosia mounts on the roof of the house, warns Amphitruo off, loads him with abuse, and finally drenches him with water. Amphitruo, at his wit's end with rage, in a scene which is most unfortunately almost entirely lost, encounters Jupiter in his (Amphitruo's) likeness. He at once accuses him of being an adulterer: Jupiter retorts the charge. It is decided at last that it should be left to Blepharo, the helmsman of Amphitruo's ship, to decide which of the twain is the real Amphitruo. To Amphitruo's chagrin Blepharo confesses his inability to decide which is which. Jupiter enters the house. Amphitruo, locked out, is now almost driven mad: he asserts his resolution of breaking into his house and perpetrating an indiscriminate massacre, when a terrific thunderstorm breaks, and he falls speechless to the ground. Bromia, a maid servant, comes out in alarm and finds her master lying speechless. On his coming to himself, she relates the miraculous delivery of Alcumena of twins, and tells how one of these had just leaped from his cradle and strangled two enormous serpents. Amphitruo declares his intention of consulting the seer Tiresias, when Jupiter appears in his proper form amid peals of thunder and explains everything.

From what Greek source Plautus borrowed The Amphitruo is unknown. Sophocles wrote an Amphitryon, but it was a tragedy : it was, it seems, copied by Accius. Euripides wrote an Alcmena,¹ a tragedy, of which a large number of fragments have come down to us, none in the least resembling any part of The Amphitruo. Archippus, a poet of the Old Comedy, who lived at the end of the 5th century B.C., wrote a comedy of the name, but there is nothing in our Amphitruo of the character of the Old Comedy, nothing at all resembling the few fragments of Archippus's play which have come down to us. The "Long Night" (νὺξ μακρά) of Plato Comicus is a title which, as far as it goes, justifies the suggestion of Casaubon that it may have been the original of our Amphitruo, but there is no evidence forthcoming to make this more than a suggestion. Some have sought the source of the play in the ἰλαροτραγωδία or φλυακογραφία (burlesque) of the Sicilian Rhinthon, who, we know from Athenaeus, wrote an Amphitryon : and it is most likely that The Amphitruo is an exalted¹ Rhinthonica. Traces of burlesque, for instance the old age of Amphitruo, still exist, perhaps not noticed by Plautus himself: while the general sentiment and treatment are those of comedy pure and simple. The plot may be Rhinthon's, the treatment is that of Plautus.

We would gladly, if we dared, suppose the play to be an original conception, but such a supposition is, of course, impossible. But though not original, the play is the most original of all the plays of Plautus. A Roman tone pervades it. In reading the account given by Sosia of the campaign against the Teleboae, we feel as if Plautus had versified a page of some old Latin Annalist. The ultimatum of Amphitruo, with its demand for restitution, and threat in case of refusal, the pitched battle, and crushing defeat of the enemy: the slaying of the commander-in-chief of the enemy

by Amphitruo with his own hand, these particulars are all in proper Livian style. Then Alcumena herself is a true Roman wife, fulfilling the Roman conception of an equal consort with great dignity and perfection. Indeed The Amphitruo must have been, when entire, one of the best plays written by Plautus. Although it does not attain to the high tone of the Captivi, with its tale of chivalrous devotion, nor to the romantic honour depicted in the Trinummus, The Amphitruo cannot have been deserving of a place lower than third among the plays of Plautus. Were it not for the cardinal defect in the plot, referred to in the Notes on Act 1. Sc. 2. 19, it would deserve even a higher place. The admirable delicacy with which a dangerous subject is treated alone shows a master's hand. It is sufficient to contrast it with Molière's Amphitryon to show the immeasurable superiority of Plautus: it would be an insult to Plautus to compare it with Dryden's. Whatever Molière has added to Plautus has been a detriment:¹ wherever he has departed from the treatment of Plautus he has lowered his conception. It may be said Plautus was only an adapter, but I am now comparing him with an adapter. Neither Molière nor Dryden for one instant arrived at the conception of the loving husband and faithful wife which Plautus places before us. The play is the most simple, dignified, and tender of all the plays of Plautus.

Amphitruo uxorem salutat laetus speratam suam, quam omnium Thebis vir unam esse optumam diiudicat, quamque adeo cives Thebani vero rumiferant probam :

these are the becoming words in which the returning warrior salutes his wife. And we have a fine conception of a woman's duties put into the mouth of Alcumena, non ego illam mihi dotem duco esse, quae dos dicitur, sed pudicitiam et pudorem et sedatum cupidinem, deum metum, parentum amorem et cognatum concordiam, tibi morigera atque ut munifica sim bonis, prosim probis.

and in the indignant but calm nunc, quando factis me impudicis abstinei, ab impudicis dictis avorti volo.

But the tenderness of a loving wife cannot be prevented from breaking out when Amphitruo, as she thinks him, invokes the anger of Jupiter on himself :

ah propitius sit potius :

which has its counterpart in Amphitruo's exclamation on hearing of his wife's happy delivery :

iam istuc gaudeo, ut ut erga me meritast.

These are points that second class poets, even poets so high in the second class as Molière, altogether miss, poets who looked on The Amphitruo as a mere farce. As a farce the play must simply have been perfection.

THE TEXT.

The difficulties of restoring Plautus are caused by many things. In the first place, the language in the time of Plautus was in a state of rapid transition. Old forms were contending with new; and Plautus sometimes used the ancient, sometimes the modern form. The transcribers of the age of Hadrian effected much the same alteration of the text of Plautus as would now result if an editor were set the task of reproducing Chaucer in modern English. They abolished the old forms in most instances, but allowed them to remain when they misunderstood them for something else, sometimes when they saw that they were necessary to the metre. In metre they observed that Plautus allowed himself certain licenses, but misunderstanding these they thought themselves justified in permitting them to an extent which far transcended Plautus's limits and violated his rules. This especially applies to the case of hiatus. It would be very easy to admit hiatus wherever the MSS. exhibit it, provided that the verse will scan. It would, on the other hand, be very easy to deny hiatus altogether with Mueller and Leo, and set about amending the text wherever hiatus occurs. Nothing could be more delightful. The critic would have a large and pleasant field for exhibiting his powers. But the real task of the Plautine critic is the difficult one of keeping the just mean between these two extremes ; to distinguish between the license of the transcribers, and the rules of the author himself : to lay down the latter as his guide ; and to apply them with judgment and common sense to each instance as it occurs. It is only possible to lay down general laws for Plautus to a limited extent.

Mss. There was, in very early times, a double recension of the plays of Plautus : one, the Ambrosian recension, represented by the Ambrosian palimpsest of the fourth century in the Ambrosian library at Milan ; the other, the Palatine recension, as represented by what are commonly called the Palatine mss. B C D. We are without the assistance of the Ambrosian palimpsest in The Amphitruo : an immense though not unmixed loss. We should have been glad to have had the utterances of that Sibylline book of criticism reported respecting such prodigious readings as l. 1. 161 and l. 3. 51, even though interpreted differently by German sages : but that was not to be. The folia containing The Amphitruo have been long since whirled out of mortal ken. We are left, among good MSS., to B and D (M), for C,¹ the Decurtatus of Camerarius, contains the last twelve plays only.

B, the Codex Vetus of Camerarius, a cursive MS. of the 11th century, now in the Vatican library at Rome. The oldest MS. extant with the exception of the Ambrosian. It contains all the plays.

D, the Codex Ursinianus, having been the property of Cardinal Orsini, an excellent MS. of the 12th century. It contains the last twelve plays, and prefixed to these The Amphitruo, Asinaria, Aulularia, and the Captivi, up to 2. 3. 4.

D is little if at all inferior to B: often in my judgment its tradition is preferable to that of B. See notes on 5. 1. 31; 1. 1. 80; 2. 2. 90; 2. 2. 39.

Of inferior MSS. (m) the chief are E, F, J.

E is a MS. of the 15th century, first collated by Ritschl, whose property E was. Ritschl attached too much weight to the readings of his MS., and is followed in so doing by his successors Goetz and Loewe.

J, now in the British Museum, a MS. of the 11th or 12th century, the merits of which are not equal to its antiquity.²

² The character of J can be studied in Sonnenschein's collation of this MS. in his edition of the Captivi, and in Wagner's edition of the Aulularia.

E J are as inferior to B D as they are superior to F Z.

F, Lipsiensis, a MS. of the 15th century, though it claims the respect due to a MS., is as a critical authority not in any respect superior to an edition. It is full of conjectures, many of them unnecessary and bad.

Z is the editio princeps (Venice, 1472). Its readings, founded as they are on a worthless MS., F, are quite devoid of critical value. I have called the attention of the reader to the process of corruption in our MSS. at l. l. 141: and no single example can better illustrate the relative value of the MSS.

The characteristic errors of the MSS. have been classified by Tyrrell, Pref. p. xxxi., xxxii. I would add to his remarks that two remarkable features of Plautine MSS. are (1) A proneness to insert or to omit some small word, the insertion or omission of which does not affect the sense. (2) A proneness to transpose pairs of words. The reader will find ample illustration of both of these tendencies in the play.

PROSODY AND METRE.

The following remarks are not intended as a guide to the whole subject of Plautine versification, but only to such peculiarities as are exhibited in the Amphitruo.

TERMINATIONS.

-a. It is a disputed point whether Plautus ever lengthened a in the nominative singular of the first declension. C. F. W. Mueller, Plaut. Pros. p. 1-10, denies this lengthening altogether, I believe rightly. Ussing limits it to nominatives of Greek proper names. In this play we have only two instances presented by the MSS., both of the proper name Sosia, 1. 1. 283, 284. In both passages emendation is easy, and in this edition this long a does not appear.

ita. According to the MSS. of Plautus the last syllable of ita is often long. Mueller, p. 14, has collected the instances, twenty-two in number. Many of these are only apparent instances: e.g. Cist. 1. 3. 3 :

ita properavit de puella proloqui, disappears, when we reflect that the whole speech in which it occurs is at least a generation later than Plautus. Some instances are from spurious prologues and arguments; others are of easy correction; as Asin. 1. 1. 18.

Three apparent instances are found in The Amphitruo: 2. 2. 3: 5. 1. 25: 5. 1. 29. These are all to be emended, or to be otherwise explained. I do not believe that Plautus ever lengthened the final syllable of ita: see note on 2. 2. 3.

frustra. The last syllable of frustra is short in Plautus: frustra sis often ends an iambic or trochaic verse. There is no crucial instance of this in The Amphitruo; see on 3. 3. 19.

contra. The last syllable of contra is apparently short, Pseud. 1. 2. 23 :

Adsistite omnes contra me et quae lóquor advertite ánimum, the fourth foot of an iambic septenarius being invariably an iambus when it ends with a word. This line indeed is condemned as spurious by Goetz with Lorenz, Brix, Mueller, and others. But as the analogy of frustra is in favour of contra, and as the verse is ascribed to Ennius by Varro (L. L. 7. 12), to say nothing of a more doubtful line ascribed to the same author by Servius (Aen. 8. 361), Contra carinantes verba atque obscena profatus;

Quis pater aut cognatus volet nos contra tueri

as in Lucilius,¹ ap. Nonium, p. 153, 17, contra venis seems to begin a hexameter, I do not see sufficient reason for condemning the passage in the Pseudolus. Brix indeed condemns it on the ground that contra was never a preposition in Plautus: but this I am disposed to doubt. Accordingly I have adopted in 1. 1. 63 the reading Teleboae contra ex oppido with Leo against the MS. order contra Teleboae.

-e. The termination of the ablative of the third declension is frequently long in Plautus. There is no doubt about carnē, Capt. 4. 4. 7 ; mortē, Mil. 3. 1. 112 ; partē, Men. 3. 2. 14 ; pumicē, Pers. 1. 1. 43. The Amphitruo has no similar instance, but we find the ablative of a Greek proper name Naucrati, 2. 2. 228 : this evidently rests on a different basis ; see note.

-re. It is a moot point whether Plautus ever lengthened -re in the infinitive. Wagner asserted that it was often long in Plautus, Mueller denies that it ever was. I agree with Mueller, in spite of the fact that the MSS. seem to support Wagner. If dicere was ever prosodically dicerē how comes it that we never find this quantity in an absolutely crucial position defying emendation, as, for instance, dicereque would be, ending an iambic septenarius ? The passages with the long ending are sometimes to be emended, sometimes to be otherwise accounted for. For instance in Mil. 4. 8. 6 :¹

Tibi salutem mé iusserunt dicere. PH. Salvaé sient, iusserunt dicerem might be suggested. The Amphitruo has no instance which supports Wagner : see note on dicere, 1. 1. 190.

-o: ego. With Mueller, I do not believe that Plautus ever lengthened the last syllable of ego. The full examination of this point is, however, beyond the limits of the present work. In The Amphitruo two apparent, but only apparent, instances of egō occur. 1. 1. 45:

Nam quōm pugnabant mǎxume, egō fugiebam mǎxume.

Here tum should be inserted after ego with the second hand of B. In 2. 1. 56:

Néque lac lactis mǎgis est simile, quam ille ego similíst mei

the accentuation, without lengthening, of egó is perfectly legitimate. Fleckeisen's similis est is obvious, but unnecessary. In 2. 1. 53 a slight transposition gets rid of egōmet.

-ar. The verbal ending -ar is always long in Plautus: loquār, Prol. 38; 2. 1. 9; opprimār, 5. 1. 4.

-er. The verbal ending -er is not established by any passage in Plautus. It should, however, be long by analogy, the second person being -ēris.

The termination -er is in all other cases short. Iuppiter in Prol. 94 is only an apparent exception, see note on 1. 1. 190.

-or. The verbal ending -or in the first conjugation is invariably long: machinōr astutiam, Capt. 3. 3. 15. The Amphitruo has no instance. The ending -or in the other conjugations is more doubtful: Mueller holds it to be long.

-or in nouns, whose genitive is -ōris, is always long. 1. 1. 75:

Imperatōr utrimque hīnc et illīnc Iovi.

1. 3. 50:

Atque quanto nōx fuisti lōngiōr, haec prōxuma.

So ecastōr. Castor, from which ecastor is derived, formed its genitive Castōris in old Latin (Quintil. Inst. 1. 5. 60): so Hectōris in Ennius. 2. 2. 82:

Ecastōr equidēm te certo heri advenientem ilico.

-ur. The last syllable of igitur is apparently long. Amph. 2. 2. 87:

Vérum non est púero grāvīda. Quid igitur? Insánia.

Ritschl here defended the lengthening by the strong pause at change of speakers, as he defended dicerē, supra. And this view of syllaba anceps at change of speakers ought to commend itself to those who hold, as I think they ought, that Plautus permitted hiatus at change of speakers. See under Hiatus, infra, p. xlix. In Most. 5. 1. 42:

Quid si igitūr ego áccersam homines? Fáctum iam esse opórtuit.

If that reading is sound, the last syllable of igitur is prosodically long. Ritschl reads quid igitur si, Mueller reads ego huc: I would rather insert eam before accersam. The other instances where igitur has the accent on the last syllable do not prove lengthening. Whatever theory we may adopt as to Amph. 2. 2. 87, I do not believe that the last syllable of igitur was to Plautus prosodiacally long.

es. Es, the second singular of sum, is always long in Plautus. 2. 2. 204:

Mulier ēs, audacter iuras.

So also in the imperative and in the compound ades, Truc. 5. 28. Apparent exceptions to this are metrical or accentual, not prosodiocal.

The MSS. also testify to milēs, divēs, hospēs, sospēs, and Mueller is disposed to accept these quantities, even though the correction of the passages where they occur is easy. In Amph. 2. 2. 21, he would read:

Bona quēm penēs est virtus, making the line an iambic dimeter catalectic.

-us. The dative and ablative ending -bus has been supposed to be long by many. I agree with Mueller that that quantity is not proved, nor likely. Here, as in other instances, accentuation of a short syllable has been mistaken for the lengthening of it. In The Amphitruo we have two instances of aedibus so accented: 2. 2. 68: 3. 2. 1. -bus, like -re in infinitives, and -ur in igitur, may be lengthened at strong pauses, like change of speakers, not elsewhere. Men. 5. 2. 88:

ut ego illi(c) oculós exuram lámpadibus ardéntibus, here, if the MSS. are right, the last syllable of lam- padibus must be long, the division of an anapaest so that its first two syllables are the last two of a polysyllable being strictly forbidden in trochaic metre. But the correction lampadis, from a Latinized form lampada, has long been thought probable.

-at. The termination -at in the present indicative of the first conjugation is generally long in Plautus. As. 5. 2. 24:

Fúndum alienum arát incultum fámiiliarem désérit.

There is no instance in The Amphitruo. dat probably is not, as Ritschl seems to think, Prol. Trin. p. 185, an exception to this rule. Two instances of dāt are from Arguments and Prologues: Epid. Arg. 4: and Cas. Prol. 44. The only remaining ones are Curc. 1. 3. 4: Rud. 4. 4. 28: for which see Appendix II.

-at in the imperfect indicative is generally long in Plautus. Most. 3. 2. 101:

Seni non erát otium íd sum opperítus.

The Amphitruo has no instance.

-et. The present of the second conjugation generally has -ēt. Amph. 1. 1. 87:

Quisque ut steterát iacēt, óptinetque órdinem.

2. 2. 20:

Virtús omnia ín sese habēt, omnia ádsunt.

In the present subjunctive also -et is generally long. Pers. 1. 2. 16:

Sed quí legirupam dámnet dēt in públicum.

The Amphitruo has no test case ; nor of -at in the present subjunctive, nor of -et in the future, or imperfect subjunctive, but both these terminations seem to have been long, see Mueller, p. 65, 66.

Amph. Prol. 102 is no proof of the lengthening of the final syllable of ipsemet. See note on l. l. 191.

-is in verbs generally had the normal quantity ; but in Amph. 2. l. 5 we find :

Facis ut tuis nulla apud te fidēs sit.

Here facis tu is generally read ; but as this is bacchiac metre, in which Plautus seems to have liked to keep the original long quantity of verbal syllables ending in -t, owing to the strong ictus, Spengel may be right in adhering to the MSS., but I do not think he is.

aīs is not considered an exception : this is supposed to point to an old fourth conjugation.

-it is long in the third singular present of the fourth conjugation : as it from eo. This was originally eit, and traces of this form are found in the MSS. I have introduced īt, Amph. 1. 3. 35 :

Tēpus it : exire ex urbe priusquam lucescāt volo.

So also in the compounds exit, adit, deperit.

-it is also sometimes long in the third singular of the perfect. Amph. 2. 2. 11 :

Vicīt et domūm laudis cōpos revēnit.

The above include all the instances of abnormal prosodiacal quantity of terminations exhibited in The Amphitruo.

Influence of Accent. There are two sorts of accent:— Verbal accent, or the accent which each word had in ordinary pronunciation; metrical accent, or the accent given by the metrical ictus to a syllable. Verbal accent never fell in Latin on the last syllable. Hence there was always a tendency in Latin to shorten final syllables. This was felt most in iambic words, the last syllable being shortened by a principle of compensation for the weight laid in pronunciation on the first syllable. Hence imperatives like abi, redi, mane, roga, puta, vola, ama, became pyrrhics in ordinary conversation, and are regularly employed as pyrrhics in Latin comedy. Most commonly they naturally form the beginning of an anapaest or tribrach, but are often found even as the two last syllables of a dactyl, when the metrical accent would not affect the scansion. Amph. 2. 2. 117:

Hánc rogá. Me quidém praesente numquam factumst, quod sciam.

Amph. 5. 1. 74:

Ábi domum, iubě vasa pura actutum adornari mihi.

The principle that an iambus was for metrical purposes equivalent to a pyrrhic, was extended to other words and combinations of words, and iambic words were treated as pyrrhics for the purpose of scansion— (1) in trochaic verse, where the metrical accent retracted the quantity. Most. 1. 3. 105 :

Nová pictura intémpolare vís opus lepidíssimum.

(2) in iambic verse where the metrical accent pulled forward the quantity. Poen. 1. 3. 7 :

Dedī dúdum, prius quam me évocavistí foras.

These and other licenses were much more common at the beginning of the verse than elsewhere, for the very simple reason that the speaker took fresh breath there; next to the beginning of the verse, the fifth foot in septenarii has most instances of such license, for a similar reason that the speaker paused there also, though to a less extent.

This principle was extended to two monosyllables forming together an iambus. When a monosyllable is preceded by a short accented monosyllable, the second monosyllable may be shortened in spite of its position, so that in trochaic verse an amphibrach becomes a tribrach, as Amph. 3. 3. 9 :

Án id ioco dixti? équidem dictum sério ac veró ratus;
1. 1. 274 :

Quíd in tabernacló fecisti? víctus sum, si díxeris;
a bacchius an anapaest, as Bacch. 1. 1. 17 :

Quid in consilio cónsuluistis. Béne. Pol haud meretríciumst;

in iambic verse a bacchius becomes an anapaest, Capt. 1. 2. 15 :

Ita ut dicis ; nam si fáxis, te in caveám dabo ;

an amphimacer becomes a dactyl, Ter. And. 2. 6. 17 :

Nil própter hanc rem : séd est quod succensét tibi :

This is especially common with the phrases quid hic, quid hoc, and in the fourth foot of an iambic senarius.

This principle was further extended to polysyllabic words beginning with an iambus, so that in trochaic metre an amphibrach became a tribrach, as Amph. 2. 2. 129 :

dédisse dono hodié, qua te illi dónatum esse díxeras ;

and a bacchius becomes an anapaest, Stich. 4. 1. 27 :

nós potius onerémus nosmet vícissatim vóluptátibus.

In iambic metre a bacchius becomes an anapaest, as Trin. 1. 2. 92 :

Dedistín hoc pacto ei gládium qui se occíderet ;

often when a word beginning with a spondee is preceded by a preposition, ab iniústis, Amph. Prol. 36 ; ab exercitu, Prol. 140.

Besides these general laws, it is to be observed that several words in common use, not iambic in form, but trochaic, are treated as pyrrhics ; such are ille, iste, inde, unde, nempe. These, especially at the beginning of a line, an accented syllable following, were often so scanned. Amph. 3. 4. 5 :

Ille návem salvam núntiat aut irati adventúm senis.

Pers. 4. 3. 51 :

Iste qui tabellas ádfert, adduxit simul.

Trin. 2. 4. 25 :

Nempe quas spopondi. Immo quas dependi, inquito.

In other parts of the verse, the first syllable of the four first words was shortened when a monosyllable preceded, which with the first syllable made up the arsis or thesis of a foot. The first syllable of several other words was shortened by Plautus under these conditions : among the most common of these are omnis, exercitus, uxor, eccam, immo, ex, esse : these may be classed as semi-short syllables.

tibi and sibi (as well as mihi) are frequently wholly elided, 5. 1. 9 :

Ita eraé meae hodie cóntigit. nam ubi párturit, dēos sibi invocat.

5. 2. 1 :

Bono ánimo es : adsum auxilio, Amphitruo, tibi ét tuis.

Buecheler has pointed out that there was originally a form of these datives capable of contracted pronunciation just as much as mihi is, derived from a termination in -bhi.

illic and istic, nominatives singular, always have the last syllable short.

hic, nominative singular, almost always is short. For some possible exceptions see on Amph. 1. 1. 146.

fierem, fieri, have the first syllable long when they form the last word of an iambic or trochaic verse and in bacchiac metre. 2. 1. 42 :

nūnc venis etiam ūltro inrisum dōminum ; quae neque fieri ;
2. 1. 17 :

vidit nec potést fieri tempore ūno ;

elsewhere they are short : 2. 2. 61 ; Prol. 82 ; 3. 2. 10.

Aphaeresis of -s. The dropping of s following a short vowel at the end of a word, common in old Latin poetry, is frequent in Plautus : Amph. 1. 1. 257, Amphitruonis sum ; Bacch. 2. 3. 79, occidistis me ; Rud. 2. 6. 28, ubi estis nunc ?

Synizesis, or the pronouncing of two vowels as one, is very common in Plautus, but limited to certain words. These are meus, suus, tuus, eius, eorum, deus, duo, dies, and their cases : fui, eo, and other parts of these verbs : diu, prius, duellum, dein, deinde, proinde, proin, deorsum, seorsum, puella, praeopture, dehortari, and a few others. Also, probably, words containing u, like nouos, navis, boues, and a few others. But the student must be cautioned against supposing himself at liberty to extend synizesis beyond these limits. Such contractions as praemiorum, sapiens, filius, are illegitimate except in anapaestic metre. The laws of bacchiac and cretic metre are just as strict in this respect as iambic and trochaic metre.

Akin to synizesis is Syncope or slurring (of words containing liquids).

Although the metrical accent accounts for a large number of shortening of syllables long by position, it was assisted in many cases by the natural process of syncope or slurring of words, especially of words containing the liquids l, r, n. This is a branch of the subject which has not yet received the attention it deserves, nor is this the place to treat it at length. None of the moderns¹ appear inclined to break new ground in this direction, the tendency with them being to ascribe everything to accent. The only great critic who has taken a right view, though only partially right, on this point is Ritschl, and he is most wrongly taken to task by Wagner (preface to the Aulularia, p. xxx.) for going even the length he did. He did not in my opinion go half far enough. The limits he puts to syncope (Prol. Trin. p. cxliv.) are (1) that all words so affected are nouns or particles, not verbs; (2) that they are iambic words; (3) that they nearly always have a liquid between the two vowels.¹ The first two of these restrictions seem to me unwarranted. If I have made up my mind on any point connected with Plautine scansion it is this, that in common words, whether monosyllables, dissyllables, or polysyllables, syncope is as true a theory of the cause of the shortening of a syllable long by position as metrical accent; although no doubt the two principles worked together, as they do in all poetry, which like Latin or English has a strong accentual pronunciation. This, however, is a subject for a separate paper. I would only ask any one to consider all the instances where vel apparently shortens a following long syllable in Plautus; the large number of instances where voluptas, voluntas, ¹ He includes among words slurred apud, quidem, bonus bonum, malos, mali, bene, male, domum, domi, domo, manus, enim, tamen, senem, simul, fores, foras, minas, amor, erum. Of these I should say that domi, domum, domo, enim, quidem, were often pyrrhics in ordinary pronunciation. Ritschl's view as to the pronunciation of the remaining words seems to me most probable; he expresses his opinion thus strongly: "quae quis tam pravo iudicio est ut correptis potius ultimis syllabis quam pronuntiando elisis primis dicta esse contendat?" but his words of caution are also worth repeating: "verum difficile est et lubricum, quid vitae consuetudo veterum probare vel potuerit vel non potuerit, assequi ratiocinando et comminiscendo velle." Ritschl even extends his theory to sine, and I believe he is right. I would extend it even to per and vel.

Philippi, are found with the middle syllable (apparently) short; the large number of instances where velis and fores (foris, foras) are apparent pyrrhics, and say is it not at least equally likely that the effect of the liquid has been to cut off a syllable in each case? The consequence of rigidly holding the accentual theory will be the introduction in many cases of a most unnatural proceleusmaticus, which is unlikely; in others the consecution of dactyl and anapaest, which is impossible.

Take for instance this line, Aul. 4. 5. 5 :

attat foris crepuit. senex eccum aurum ecfert foras.

In that trimeter if any one contends that the second foot was to Plautus's ear a proceleusmaticus and the third a dactyl, I can only say σοὶ μὲν δοκέϊτω ταῦτ', ἐμοὶ δὲ θάτερα. I have said something on this subject in my notes, l. 2. 1,¹ but the full discussion of the subject deserves a monograph.

METRE.

The Plautine iambic trimeter admits an iambus, spondee, dactyl, anapaest, or tribrach, in every foot, except the last, which must be a pure iambus. It also occasionally admits a proceleusmaticus,¹ especially at the beginning of the verse.

The penthemimeral caesura being usual, it follows that the second foot rarely consists of a word. If it does, it should never be a spondee, rarely an anapaest, in which case a monosyllable usually follows: see note on 3. 2. 43: nor should the third foot ever be an anapaestic word.²

2. An iambic trimeter or tetrameter must not end in two iambic words, or an iambic word, with an iambus preceding. There is no objection to the line ending with two iambs, provided the last word is a polysyllable, or if the second last word is a fourth paeon or an anapaest. Thus there is no objection to such endings as solus ambulem, molestiam, viduior magis, animum tuum. But such endings as boni viri, improbis viris are quite impossible. This law applies to the end of trochaic tetrameters also, and to the end of the first half of iambic tetrameters, whether catalectic or acata-lectic. There is no catalectic iambic tetrameter in The Amphitruo: in the acatalectic, 5. 1. 6 :

² The student, of course, must carefully distinguish between anapaests and anapaestic words, iambs and iambic words.

Animó malest aquám velim : corrúmp̄ta sum atque ab̄súmp̄ta sum,

aquam should probably be written aq̄um or changed to aquolam: see note. The commonest exceptions to this rule are the expressions malam crucem and bona fide, which several times end the verse, these expressions being treated as single words.

The iambic septenarius (tetrameter catalectic) or “laughing metre” allows the same feet as the trimeter. The fourth foot is usually an iambus: invariably so when it ends with a word. The strong diaeresis after the fourth foot causes hiatus to be regularly allowed, and a pyrrhic to be accepted as an iambus. The seventh foot may, however, be a tribrach, spondee, anapaest, or even dactyl, rarely a proceleusmaticus: As. 2. 4. 24 (if sound).

The iambic octonarius (tetrameter acatalectic) admits the same feet as the trimeter: the eighth foot must be a pure iambus.

The Plautine trochaic tetrameter catalectic or trochaic septenarius admits a trochee, spondee, dactyl, tribrach, or anapaest, in every foot, except the last, which must be a trochee or tribrach: occasionally a proceleusmaticus.

Diaeresis. As a rule the trochaic tetrameter is divided into two parts by a natural break at the end of the fourth foot : as

Crédo edepol equidém dormire | sólem atque adpotúm probe ;
but it is sometimes neglected : as Átque hunc telo sũo sibi malítia a foribus péllere.

This is not very common ; but it is usual for the diaeresis to take place after a preposition, forming the first part of a compound word.

Ritschl has laid it down that when there is a dactyl in the fourth foot of a trochaic septenarius, the regular diaeresis rarely takes place : but instead a diaeresis after the fourth arsis : Ter. Phorm. 5. 6. 23 :

Póne adprendit pállio resupínat : respició rogo.

But that is not a real diaeresis. It is better to say simply that a dactyl is generally allowed¹ in the fourth foot only when there is no diaeresis ; when the line is in fact scanned as a whole, not as consisting of two parts. A very similar thing occurs, only more striking, with respect to the diaeresis in iambic septenarii and octonarii. In these verses the diaeresis is most strongly marked ; causing, as we have seen above, the phenomena of hiatus and syllaba anceps to be regularly allowed after the fourth foot, that foot being, when it ends with a word, invariably an iambus. But, and this is the feature referred to as parallel to the admission of the dactyl in the fourth foot of trochaic septenarii, when these iambic verses are not scanned as asynartete, but continuously, as one verse, in other words, when the diacresis is neglected, then other feet are permissible in the fourth foot; as Rud. 2. 2. 12 (iambic septenarius):

Tortis superciliis contracta fronte frauduléntum,

Amph. 1. 1. 40 (iambic octonarius),

Regique Thebanó Creoni régnum stabilivit suom.

A preposition may be treated either as forming part of the word to which it is prefixed, or as a separate word from it, for these purposes.

*Consecution of Dactyl and Anapaest.*¹ The consecution of dactyl and anapaest is forbidden in iambic, and is very rare in trochaic metre. Ussing indeed, Prol., p. 181, quotes such sequences as Amph. Prol., 120, Nam meus pater intus; 3. 2. 8, Aut satisfaciat; 3. 2. 66, Ut quae apud legionem; Trin. 3. 3. 76, Continuo operito. But each of these admits of separate excuse, and if better instances than these cannot be produced, the law may be taken as without exception.

Dactyls. A dactylic word like piscibus should only occupy the first place in either iambic or trochaic verse. Even here it is rare, and rarer in trochaic than in iambic verse. The trochaic caesura of a dactyl is forbidden, save in the first foot : i.e., a dactyl should not be divided, so that its first two syllables belong to one word, and its last syllable to another, except in the first foot : Trin. 2. 4. 23 (Ritschl) is correct :

Millé drachumarum tárpezitae Olýmpico.

Division of Anapaests. An anapaest should not be divided in iambic or trochaic verse, so that its first syllable is the last of a dissyllable or polysyllable, or so that its two first syllables are the two last of a polysyllable. Thus Aul. 2. 7. 25 :

Confige sagíttis fures thensaurarios,¹

Mil. 3. 2. 39 :

Ibi erat bilibris aquális sic propter cados,

Amph. Prol. 55 :

Comoedia ut sit omnibus íslem versibus, are not Plautine.

Prepositions as usual are exceptional ; and the last syllable of inter, propter, may begin an anapaest. Thus there is no objection to Ter. And. 1. 1. 128 :

Si própter amorem uxórem nolet dúcere :

nor to Mil. 4. 7. 1, 5.

Anapaestic metre admits only anapaests,

¹ It is curious that the simple correction confige has not been made here, 'despatch with your arrows.' Cf. Truc. 2. 7. 52, te hac (sc. machaera) offatim conficiam. Cf. Pseud. 1. 5. 49.

dactyls, and spondees, and, occasionally, proceleusmatici. The chief anapaestic metres are dimeters, tetrameters catalectic or septenarians, and tetrameters acatalectic or octonarians. In this edition, vss. 1. 1. 11-13 are arranged as anapaestic dimeters; 5. 1. 10 as an anapaestic octonarius. The accentuation in anapaestic verse seems to have differed greatly from that of iambic, still more from that of trochaic verse. Dactyls seem to have been strongly accented on the second syllable, causing an anomalous shortening of the last syllable of a word, where it would otherwise be long: 1. 1. 12:

Opulénto homini hoc servitūs durast.

Conversion of bacchii into anapaests, common in iambics, is naturally still more common in anapaestic verse. Synizesis, perhaps owing to the difficulty of the metre, was much more largely permitted than in other metres. The laws forbidding the consecution of dactyl and anapaest, and those which govern the division of the anapaest between two words in iambic and trochaic metre do not apply to Latin anapaestic metre. No wonder then that critics are so ready to pronounce any difficult line anapaestic, or that this metre should have gained the title of the Home for Incurables.¹ C. F. W. Mueller and A. Spengel have been the most conspicuous champions of the anapaestic metre, and introduce it freely in doubtful cases.

Cretic metre consists of cretics (aŭ'tŭmānt) ; if the first syllable be resolved, a fourth paeon results (trī'bŭērēnt) ; if the last syllable be resolved, a first paeon results (dēbīlīā). A molossus (ōccīdŭnt) is sometimes allowed as a substitute.¹ One syllable of the molossus may be resolved at a time, and these are the only variations in cretic metre. The most common of cretic metres is the cretic tetrameter, of which we have good examples, l. l. 65 seqq. :

póstquam utrimque éxitumst máxuma cópia, and the following lines supply instances of each legitimate variation.

The clausulae of cretic metre are generally trochaic, with which metre cretic has an affinity : Amph. l. l. 83, 93.

Plautus is very fond of bacchiac metre. He employs bacchiac tetrameters chiefly, but also bacchiac hexameters, bacchiac dimeters, and bacchiac trimeters. A. Spengel denies the existence of the last species of verse. The point is a doubtful one. In this edition l. l. 24, 25 are arranged as trimeters.

A normal bacchiac tetrameter is 1. 1. 21 :

Habéndum et ferúndum hoc onúst cum labóre.

The chief variations are the substitution of a molossus for a bacchius, 2. 2. 10 :

Sed hóc me beát saltem quóm perduéllis ;
the substitution of ionic a minore for the molossus, its first syllable being resolved :

Hodié qui fuerím liber eúm nunc ;

the substitution of the ionic a maiore for the molossus, its last syllable being resolved, Capt. 5. 1. 3 :

Quomque éx miseriís plurimís me exemérunt.

We also find the variation of the ionic anaclomenos, i.e. a third paeon, followed by a second epitrite, forming a colon, Amph. 2. 2. 2 :

Ita quoíque comparátumst.

This is treated by Seyffert, followed by Leo, as an iambic colon.

As the cretic favours the trochee, the bacchius favours the iambus, and clausulae of bacchiac systems are generally in iambic metre or sometimes anapaestic.

Seyffert has laid it down as a test of a bacchiac line that it must contain one pure thesis, i.e. contain one pure bacchius. This is, no doubt, generally true. I have, however, taken the liberty of disregarding it in one very uncertain line, 2. 2. 19.

Ionic a minore, as such, is supposed not to occur in Plautus; but as Plautus clearly intentionally employs it as a variation of bacchiac metre, I see no reason to deny it a place; and as the MSS. seem to point to it in l. l. 8, I have scanned that line as ionic a minore.

Plautus once, and only once, employs Sotadean metre, l. l. 14-18; see notes ad loc.

The Cantica. A Roman comedy consisted of Diverbia (dialogues) and Cantica (monologues, more or less lyrical), chanted or recited to musical accompaniment by a single actor. The metres of the Cantica present the greatest difficulty to the critic. Our state of knowledge respecting their metres¹ is perhaps something like what the knowledge of Greek choral metres was in the days of Brunck; and with much less prospect of reaching accurate knowledge respecting their structure than has been the case with the Greek metres. For two reasons — first, the number of verses in the different metres is too small for solid inductions; secondly, we have no

¹The phrase numeri innumeri of Plautus's epitaph means "metreless metres" or "metres and non-metres," and has been thought to refer to the obscurity of the metres of the Cantica:

Postquam est mortem aptus Plautus, comoedia luget Scena est deserta: dein Risus, Ludus, Iocusque, Et numeri innumeri simul omnes collacrimarunt.

antistrophe to help us. Many critics, including Hermann, Studemund, W. Christ, Seyffert, and A. Spengel, have devoted much attention to the Cantica, with very different results. When we get outside the ordinary bacchiac and cretic metres, it is scarcely too much to say that all is uncertain. Fortunately the Cantica of The Amphitruo are particularly simple and easy, and I have no doubt as to the metre save in some half dozen lines: though doubting, I have been obliged to adopt some view as to these lines, and in so doing I have tried to adhere as closely as possible to the tradition of the MSS. I have printed in Appendix I. A. Spengel's arrangement of the Cantica.

Hiatus. 1. Hiatus is regularly allowed with monosyllables when they form the first syllable of a resolved arsis. This hiatus all critics are agreed about: 3. 2. 33:

Verúm periclitatus súm animúm tuom;

1. 1. 249:

Quíd, malum, non súm ego servos Amphitruonis Sósia?

2. Hiatus is regularly allowed in the diaeresis of iambic octonarii or septenarii: 3. 4. 17 (iamb. oct.):

atque illuc sursum escéndero: | inde óptume aspellam vírum;

Asin. 2. 3. 1 (iamb. sept.):

ut démonstratae súnť mihi | hasce aédis esse opórtet.

There is no difference of opinion, nor is there any possible on this point either.

Hiatus is also allowed in the diaeresis of anapaestic verses, when they have one; in the diaeresis of cretic tetrameters; and, probably, of bacchiac tetrameters also. In this position also syllaba anceps is freely admitted; i.e. a short syllable may end the first half, being treated as long, as though at the end of a verse.

3. Whether hiatus is allowed in the diaeresis of trochaic septenarii is a disputed point. W. Christ and A. Spengel and Ritschl in his Prologue to the Trinummus argued that it was permissible: C. F. W. Mueller, and lately Leo, deny it. Goetz, Loewe, and Schoell usually correct it.

I have no doubt whatever that hiatus was sparingly permitted at the diaeresis of trochaic septenarii, especially where there was a natural pause, for the following reasons. First, the MSS. exhibit an enormous number of instances of hiatus here. Grant that a large number of these are easily curable, and should be cured, it is likely that the transcribers were encouraged to permit hiatus to an enormous extent here by the fact that they found many undoubted instances of it existing. Secondly, the analogy of the undoubted permission of hiatus in the longer iambic metres is a strong argument for the permission of hiatus in trochaic metres. This would be no argument if hiatus was the invariable rule in iambic metres. But as it sometimes takes place in iambic metres, and sometimes not, it is a strong presumption that hiatus may sometimes take place in trochaic metres. That it takes place more seldom is accountable, as the natural result of the fluent or trochaic nature of the verse; but where a stop coincides with the diaeresis, it is unreasonable to doubt that hiatus was permitted. Thus the following lines cannot be altered without damage to the verse, Amph. 1. 3. 20 :

Cárnufex, non égo te novi? ábin e conspectú meo.

Stich. 5. 4. 48 :

Uno cantharó potare, únum scortum dúcere.

4. Hiatus in iambic trimeters is less frequent. The same champions are ranged on either side for and against hiatus. W. Christ, p. 336, allows hiatus in the chief caesura "when, after a stop or long word, the second part of the verse is sharply separated from the first, or where after an ablative case or before h the collision of two vowels is less offensive." As a general rule, hiatus in trimeters is to be corrected; but if it is found in the MSS. at any strong pause, such as change of speakers; after or before a proper name; after m or before h; before and of course after an interjection: if these conditions occur singly or in combination, the critic should be very slow to remove it.

5. Hiatus at the change of speakers. There can be no reasonable doubt that hiatus was freely permitted at the strong pause caused by change of speakers. It corresponds to syllaba anceps permitted at change of speakers : see supra, p. xxvi.

6. Hiatus after and before proper names. Both in Greek and Latin dramatic metres proper names are to a considerable extent legibus soluta. Plautus (and his imitators to even a greater extent in the spurious prologues and other adjecticious parts of the plays) undoubtedly seems to have permitted hiatus both before and after proper names more than in other parts. The Amphitruo furnishes a considerable number of instances which it would be rash to alter.

1. 1. 121 :

Néc Iugulae neque Vésperugo néque Vergiliae óccidunt.

1. 2. 9 :

Complébo atque omnem Ámphitruonis fámiliam.

Short vowel before a mute and liquid. A vowel short by nature cannot be lengthened by position before a mute and liquid. This law applies to Greek comedy as well, but not to Greek tragedy. It is observed in both Roman comedy and tragedy. Such scansions as $\pi\bar{a}\tau\rho\varsigma$, $\delta\delta\mu\eta$, $\bar{\epsilon}\pi\rho\varsigma$ are, as a rule, impossible in Greek comedy ; such scansions as pātris, muliēbris, mīgro are impossible in ancient Roman tragedy and comedy alike.

The foregoing observations, although not at all exhaustive, will probably be found sufficient for the ordinary student of Plautus. They show that, whereas to a careless reader the versification of Plautus is apt to seem capricious and not subject to rule, it is as a matter of fact extremely artificial, and difficult to imitate without tripping; and the student should also take notice of the fact that while the licenses of Plautus are governed by fixed laws, which can be laid down with more or less certainty, the large majority of his verses are perfectly free from license of any kind. Plautus is master of his metre. In his Iambics he is the equal of Terence; in his trochaics he is vastly superior to the latter, and indeed has no rival in Latin. And it was doubtless the ease and fluency of these metres, joined with the unaffected simplicity of his diction, that won for Plautus the praise of Stilo, namely, that if the Muses were to choose to speak in Latin they would speak in the diction of Plautus.¹

PLAVTI AMPHITRVO.

ARGUMENTVM I.

In faciē versus Ámphitruonis Iúppiter.
 dum bellum gereret cum Telebois hostibus, Alcmenam uxorem cepit usurariam.
 Mercurius formam Sosiae servi gerit absentis: his Alcmena decipitur dolis. 5 postquam rediere veri Amphitruo et Sosia, uterque deluduntur in mirum modum.
 hinc iurgium, tumultus uxori et viro, donec cum tonitru voce missa ex aethere adulterum se Iuppiter confessus est. 10

ARGUMENTUM I.

ARG. I. Placed after Arg. II. by Fleckeisen and others.
 INCIPIT PROLOGUS IN AMPHITRIONEM PLAUTI POETAE B, D has no heading.—1. amphitrionis BD, amphytrionis E, and so generally throughout the play. The MSS. in no case preserve the true Plautine form Amphitruo.—2. dum M; we should rather expect quom gereret, which Fleck. reads. thelobois M.
 —3. Alcumenam BD, the only form in the play. Ussing suggests that the writer of the Argument may have supposed the antepenult to be short. So in both the Arguments to the Pseudolus, cacula makes its first syllable long, wrongly.
Alcmenam Valla.—5. Alcmena M, Alcmena Valla.—7. delu- duntur dolis M, dolis erased by Bothe, with m. luduntur dolis mirum in modum, Lamb. immirum D.

ARGUMENTVM ACROSTICHUM.

Amóre captus Álcumenas Iúppiter
 Mutavit sese in formam eius coniugis,
 Pro patria Amphitruo dum decernit cum hostibus.
 Habitu Mercurius ei subservit Sosiae.
 Is advenientis servom ac dominum frustra habet. 5
 Turbas uxori ciet Amphitruo, atque invicem Raptant pro moechis. Blepharo captus arbiter Vter sit non quit Amphitruo decernere.
 Omnem rem noscunt. geminos illa enititur.

ARGUMENTUM II.

ARG. 2. AMPHITRIO. ARGUMENTUM B.—1. alcumenes m D₂.
 —2. formam eius M, with hiatus, which it is not wise to attempt to remove in an Argument. The composers of the Arguments seem to have introduced hiatus intentionally. The obvious transpositions have been proposed. Lind. reads illius coniugis, and 1 ms. (E) has illius virginis. LG give absentis coniugis.—3. dum cernit M: decernit B₂, Bothe.—
 5. servum M.—6. atque M, ac se Leo.—9. illa] Alcumena M, illa Bothe. A. Spengel proposed to omit geminos. geminos Alcmena parit, Guyet.

PROL.—PROLOGUS om. M. MERCURIUS B. MERC D.—1. uultis M.—5. Ussing inserts me after bene with Loman, making expedire transitive, but this is not necessary.—uultis M, and as a general rule M give suus, uultus, cum, and the like.—peregrique B, rightly; peregreque B., peregrinaque D¹. 8. nunciis B.—9. So M, except that B and E have ut. Ussing inserts a second ut before adferam, but Leo well defends the trajection of ut from 2. 2. 212: Tibi morigera atque ut munifica sim bonis.—10. maxime M.—uestram B.— mi esse ab dis aliis, nuntiis praesim et lucro) :

 haec ut me voltis adprobare, adnitier lucrum ut perenne vobis semper suppetat :
 ita huic facietis fabulae silentium 15 itaque aequi et iusti hic eritis omnes arbitri.

Nunc quoniam iussu venio et quam ob rem venerim dicam simulque ipse eloquar nomen meum.
 Iovis iussu venio ; nomen Mercuriost mihi.
 pater huc me misit ad vos oratum meus, 20 tam etsi pro imperio vobis quod dictum foret scibat facturos, quippe qui intellexerat vereri vos se et metuere, ita ut aequomst Iovem ; verum profecto hoc petere me precario a vobis iussit leniter dictis bonis. 25 etenim ille, quoniam huc iussu venio, Iuppiter non minus quam vostrum quivis formidat malum :
 humana matre natus, humano patre mirari non est aequom, sibi si praetimet.
 atque ego quoque etiam, qui Iovis sum filius, 30 contagione mei patris metuo malum.
 propterea pacem advenio et ad vos affero.

13. ac nitier, Aldine ed.—17. cuius M, and so for the most part.—19. Mercurii, or (i-) M, corr. m.—26. iupiter D.—29. si sibi D.—30. sum M, perhaps sim : cf. 57.—32. pace (pacem E) advenio et pacem ad vos affero M, making the verse a syllable too long. fero Acidalius, LG, Leo, Ussing : I was inclined to strike out pacem and insert me before adfero, comparing 3. 4. 6, eius iussu nunc huc me adfero, but I prefer Lindemann's reading, pacem advenio et ad vos adfero, a tra-iustam rem et facilem esse oratam a vobis volo, nam iusta ab iustis iustus sum orator datus.

(nam iniusta ab iustis impetrari non decet, 35 iusta autem ab iniustis petere ea insipientiast; quippe illi iniqui ius ignorant neque tenent).
nunc iam huc animum omnes quae loquar advortite.
debetis velle quae velimus: meruimus et ego et pater de vobis et re publica; 40 nam quid ego memorem (ut alios in tragoediis vidi, Neptunum Virtutem Victoriam Martem Bellonam, commemorare quae bona vobis fecissent) quis bene factis meus pater, deorum regnator, architectust hominibus? 45

jection very like Aul. 2. 3. 3, vascula intus pure propera atque eluc. It can be readily understood why pacem would be inserted to make such a difficult construction plain. E has pacem aduenio. Weise and Holtze simply strike out pacem.—34. iuste M, iusta, Bothe.—36. Mr. Purser inserts ea which M, with either bad caesura or hiatus, omit: perhaps expetere. peterest insipientia, Brugmann.—37. illi D, nulli B, inilli E. The corruption nulli probably arose from the corruption iniquius for iniqui ius, which is found in B pr.—38. iam, erased by Fleckeisen, followed by LG; it is certain that nunciam is always trisyllabic in Plautus, but this prologue is later than Plautus himself: see Notes.—41-44. The proper punctuation was given by Saracenus and Ussing.—45. architectus M, architectust Pareus, who was not aware of the true construction: he is, however, followed by LG and Leo, who are aware of it. Ussing holds that the subjunctive is demanded. But that is not necessarily so in Plautus: and sed mos numquam illi fuit patri meo optumo, ut exprobraret quod bonis faceret boni;

 gratum arbitratur esse id a vobis sibi meritoque vobis bona se facere quae facit.

Nunc quam rem oratum huc veni primum proloquar, 50

post argumentum huius eloquar tragoediae.
 quid contraxistis frontem? quia tragoediam dixi futuram hanc? deus sum, commutavero.
 eandem hanc, si voltis, faciam iam ex tragoedia comoedia ut sit omnibus isdem versibus. 55 utrum fit an non? voltis? sed ego stultior, quasi nesciam vos velle, qui divos siem.
 teneo quid animi vestri super hac re siet:
 faciam ut commixta sit tragicocomoedia.

LG and Leo, though they adopt Ussing's view of the meaning, keep architectust.—omnibus M. I suspect the true reading is hominibus.—46. sed M, siet Ussing, connecting it with previous verse, and suggesting ille illi; but the verse must not end in two Iambic words, although pater meus may have been an exception: see Notes. Sed moris illi non fuit patri meo Bent., which is open to the same objection. patri meo scilicet (Leo) and patri meo (qui hic placet) LG are equally unlikely. I think optumo may have dropped out: see Notes.—illi M, ille suggests itself, but cf. 2. 2. 226, 227. 49. fecit M.—54. iam om. M, added by Lachmann.—55. omnis Mueller.—56. fit BD, rightly I think. sit EFZ, vulgo. The construction has been misunderstood.—57. diuus M.—59. tragico comoedia M, and Placidus on Stat. Theb. 4. 147, which Ussing defends. commixta tragico sit comoedia nam me perpetuo facere ut sit comoedia, 60 reges quo veniant et di, non par arbitror.

 quid igitur? quoniam hic servos quoque partes habet, faciam sit, proinde ut dixi, tragicomoedia.
 nunc hoc me orare a vobis iussit Iuppiter, ut conquaestores singuli in subsellia 65
 eant per totam caveam spectatoribus;
 si quoi favitores delegatos viderint, ut is in cavea pignus capiantur togae.
 si qui ambiissent palmas histrionibus seu quoiquam artifici, seu per scriptas litteras 70

Sonnenschein. sit haec tragicomoedia Fleck., LG: ut commixta sit: sit tragicomoedia Leo, and various easy emendations have been made to suit the form tragicomoedia, which must be read in 63, although there, as here, the mss. give tragico-comoedia. fiat for sit would be the simplest alteration.—61. per D.—65. conquisitores M, Servius on Aen. 8. 636: and the scansion ūt cōnquīsitores has been defended by E. Kaercher.
 It is safer to read conquaestores, an old correction.—singuli M, Servius. singula, D pr —67. sic ui D.—fautores B, Nonius,
 s. v. delegari, p. 99.—68. iis M.—69. Sive qui ambissent palmam histrionibus M. I write Si qui ambiissent palmas h.
 Various corrections have been made to bring in either ambisset of Fruter or ambissint of Ritschl. But none are probable. The pluperfect is defended by mandasset in 83, nor is it refuted by duint, which refers to a future time, nor by ambiverit vs. 74: see Notes. The form ambisset is not a very likely one. Si qui quci ambissint, Leo. Transpositions have mostly been resorted to to get rid of the hiatus. [ex] histrionibus Leo.—70. Sive quoiquam M, which Ussing retains.

seu qui ipse ambisset seu per internuntium, sive adeo aediles perfidiose quoi duint, sirempse legem iussit esse Iuppiter, quasi mágistratum sibi álterive ambíverit.
 virtute dixit vos victores vivere, 75 non ambitione neque perfidia : qui minus eadem histrioni sit lex quae summo viro ?
 virtute ambire oportet, non favitoribus.
 sat habet favitorum semper qui recte facit, si illis fides est quibus est ea res in manu. 80 hoc quoque etiam mihi in mandatis is dedit, ut conquaestores fierent histrionibus :
 qui sibi mandasset delegati ut plauderent quive alter quo placeret fecisset minus.

seu Pareus.—71. Sive M, corr. Ritschl.—ambissent B, ambisset DE, ambissit Fruter : see on 69.—72. aediles B, hence Ussing fruitlessly impugns the vulgate aediles.—73. Si similem rem ipse in legem M : splendidly emended by Fruter and Scaliger (lege Fruter).—74. ambiuerit M, ambiuerint Guyet, Ussing.—79. habere B.—81. is om. M : I have added it : it fell out after mandatis. LG, referring to this conjecture, say ille would be expected. I cannot see why : is is quite near enough even in space to Juppiter vs. 73, and even nearer in sense. For the words qui minus—in manu are practically the words of Jupiter. Pylades inserted il'le after mihi : Weise pater before in : Ussing with F and Loman writes pater at the end of the verse, an unlikely reading.—83. mandassent M, mandasset Bent.—84. Quiue quo placerent alter M, alter quo placeret Guyet. Ussing keeps Quiue quo, thinking Quiue may have been pronounced as one syllable. The transposition of eius órnamēta et corium uti conciderent. 85

 hanc fabulam inquam hic Iuppiter hodie ipse aget, Guyet is accepted by LG and Leo.—fecissent Pius.—85. Eis Lamb., Scal.—89. Quid admirati estis M, with hiatus: Quid estis admirati Pylades: Quid id estis admirati Fleck., LG; Quid? admiratin estis Loman, Mueller, Leo, an un-Plautine turn. Perhaps Quid est? admirati estis?—90. Synizesis in Iouem. Mueller transposes nunc and Iouem.—91. anno M, of course quite rightly. Ussing formerly obelized the word, conjecturing ante or antehac.—in om. E m.—92. inuocauerunt B pr., uocauerunt D pr.—94. hic om. D pr. Iuppiter hic Fleck.—95. huc om. M. It fell out after nunc, and is inserted by Lachmann and others. Abraham has shown (Stud. Plaut. p. 219) that the true Plautine usage would be hoc, as Plautus only uses an accusative with animum advertere: but he admits that in vs. 38 supra huc is the true reading, and considers it an argument against the genuineness of the prologue. There can be no doubt that it is the true reading here also.—96. huius argumentum M, huiusce Bent.; but Plautus only uses this form once, Poen. 5. 4. 87: see Notes. Pylades transposes; but ego which Mr. Purser supplies may have fallen out before elo- and is the simplest correction of the hiatus.—eloquar M, eloquor Elst.—98. ex Argo M, and so Nonius, p. 487: *Alcae*o Fleckeisen, a probable emendation accepted by LG, and not opposed by Ussing, who thinks ex Alceo may have been written by Plautus, pronounced as a dissyllable. But if ex is to be kept, it would be better to go a step farther and write ex Alco. Alcus for Alcaeus is not so great a change as Electrus or Electrius for Electryon in the next verse; or Naevius's Purpureus for Porphyryon, and other strangely Romanized Greek proper names.—101. thelobois or telobois M; est bellum M; bellum est Pylades: Telebois Ussing. But aphaeresis of e in est and es is only allowed after words ending in s when the vowel preceding s is short: see Ritschl Proleg. Trin. p. 108.—103. uxorem fecit M: the transposition of fecit and uxorem proposed by Fruter is generally accepted by editors save Ussing. It is true the hiatus is in caesura, is a proper name, in a word ending in -m, and in a prologue abounding in hiatus. But the accentuation is much against M. As to Koch's theory of a form uoxor see Notes.—104. Ussing suspects and brackets Nam, wrongly.—nouissem B₁.—105. multarum M, et multarum, Peerlkamp, ad Aen. t. i. p. 279. This, though not a Plautine turn, is accepted by LG and Leo. I strongly suspect quantusque amator sit quod complacitumst semel.

Haec urbs est Thebae : in illisce habitat aedibus

 propterea ornatus in novom innessi modum:
 nam meus pater intus nunc est eccum Iuppiter; 120

the true reading is stultarum, a rendering of an original μωρῶν, 'lewd,' cf. Bacch. 1. 1. 23. I also thought of reading inultarum, but this, though practically the same word as multarum, would introduce a prolepsis foreign to Plautus's style.—106. siet (si et E) quod M, si ei quid Boxhorn, LG.—108. coepit M.—109. is eam M, eampse Fruter, etiam Peerlkamp, istam Lachmann.—114. cum om. So M: nunc intus, Loman, Ritschl:

LG, Leo: a reading which certainly improves the accentuation and caesura, but donis donatus may be regarded as almost one word.—139. quot B₁DE.—141. cuius M. hanc fero imaginem M, with a hiatus vix credibilis, as Ussing remarks. I insert in me, which fell out before im-. Cf. l. l. 109, 110 infra. ego fero hanc Fleck., LG, Ussing. gero Lamb.—143. habebō usque M. I insert meo. usque hic LG, from Fleck., Leo.—145. So M (suppetaso) with hiatus: see on 104, 125, 134 supra. Amphitruoni signum Hermann, LG. suo in petaso Leo. petasod Ritschl, New Excursus, p. 72.—146. So M with hiatus, which is not so objectionable before h. horum intus Ritschl, LG. horunce Camerarius, a form which F. Schmidt denies to be Plautine, p. 48 of his tract, and is certainly wrong before a consonant. Ritschl also suggested nemo homo: Leo proposes illorum.—148. illic est M, ille Ussing, ille est Bothe, Leo; illic servos LG. The author of the Prologue may not have apprehended Plautus's rule: see Notes.—149. lanterna M (laterna B). Ritschl proposes either portud or lanternad: and hiatus of ablatives ending in long vowels is best cured by the paragogic d. LG give qui for illic, and insert huc before advenit with Cam.—150. illum M, illunc Cam., LG, Leo.—151. adest ferit M, an uncial corruption : corr. Palmerius.—hic spectantibus M, inspectantibus Hermann, with other changes, Mueller. Fleck. erases pretium and gives robis in its place. LG write : Adeste, erit operae pretium : nunc spectabitis, rather a pretty reading. Leo suggests sic for hic. The verse as given above with the mss. must be scanned as if erit were one syllable, with hiatus after pretium : the student should beware of scanning erit operae with too bad accents.—152. hic histr. Herm., LG. Mueller, Pros., p. 518, proposes facere una or ut faciunt. He notices that the mss. exhibit seven instances of hiatus in the last twelve lines of this Prologue.

ACT I. SC. 1. SOSIA MERCURIUS B, D has no heading.—
1. Pers. om. M. ui D with space for Q.—4. promptaria M, promptuaria Hermolaus: cf. Apuleius, Apol. 54.—5. dicere mihi M: corr. Pylades. n.—neque in ero (in erro B pr.) quicquam auxilii siet M. I insert habeam, striking out siet. Lachmann gave neque quicquam in ero sit auxilii, and so LG. Leo keeps mihi, and strikes out siet. Ussing moves siet to the beginning of 6, spoiling the metre by giving a spondee at the end of the first half of that verse.—6. malo om. M, added by Mueller.—
7. So M, making the verse a trochaic octonarius with hiatus in diaeresis : if this be objected to, homones may be read, as Mueller says. The metre of the following piece has been variously treated by Hermann, Elem. Doct. Metr. p. 393 ; by Mueller, Pros. p. 350 ; by L. Spengel, Philol. vol. 17, p. 564 ; A. Spengel, Plautus, p. 127 and Reformvorschläge, p. 334 (see Appendix I.) ; O. Seyffert, de vers. bacch. p. 21 ; Studemund, de Cant. Plaut. p. 57 ; W. Christ, Metrik. I regard the metre of 8 as Ionic a minore. I insert ego, which is not in the mss., as it is uncertain whether Plautus would have lengthened the last syllable of publicitus. Save that there are two resolutions the verse is on the model of such lines as Oed. R. 486 : πέτομαι δ' ἐλπίσιν οὔτ' ἐνθάδ' ὀρῶν οὔτ' ὀπίσω. Vss. 7, 8 are broken up by Mueller, followed by LG, into four short trochaics : Fleck. and Leo follow one of Hermann's proposals by which they become (very bad) anapaestic lines. Priscian (G. L. 3. p. 422) scans ita peregre adveniens and qui hoc noctis a portu as brachycatalectic Iambic dimeters : ingratis excitavit as a catalectic Iambic dimeter : and hospitio publicitus accipiar as a hypercatalectic Iambic dimeter, showing that he was very much in the dark as to the metre. Vs. 19 is in the mss. placed between 7 and 8 as well as in its proper place.—9. Trochaic dimeter catalectic : 9 and 10 are written as one verse in M.—10. With Leo I write this v. as Bacchiac hexameter.—portu the mss. with hiatus : Plautus wrote portud.—11. Nonne M, Non me Spengel. me mittere M, me om. Spengel, who scans the verse as an anapaestic dimeter. After much hesitation I follow him. The shortening of hoc and of the last syllable of servitus in the next verse opulénto homini hoc servítus durast (hoc mágis miser est divítis servos, nóctesque diésque assiduó satis supérquest) quó facto aut dícto adest opús, quiétus ne sis. 15 ípse dominus díves, operis ét laboris éxpers quódcumque homini áccidit lubére, posse rétur :

is legitimate in Plautine anapaests. LG bracket the verse : Leo despairs of the metre, as he does not accent it, and records LG's expulsion of it with apparent approval.—12. This and 13 seem rightly scanned as anapaestic dimeters by Spengel. LG accept Hermann's arrangement of 12 opulento homini dura hoc magis serritus est as a tetr. bacch., expelling 13 as a gloss with Gulielmius. Leo omits divitis servos, writes miserast, and seems to scan opulento...miserast as two short trochaics. There is no passage in Plautus where more various opinions are held.—14. So M, perfectly rightly : the verse is a normal Sotadean, i.e. two Ionici a majore, followed by three trochees. Bentley, in his ms. notes in his copy of Pareus, wrote 'versus Sotadicus' opposite this line. Quod noctesque diesque LG, noctes quod diesque Leo, the former I presume making the whole verse bacchiac, the latter two bacchei with catalectic Iambic dimeter (Anacreontean).—15. quo M, quod Mueller, probably rightly. —facto aut dicto adest M. The verse is a legitimate variety of the Sotadean, with contraction of the short syllables of first Ionic, and substitution of a ditrochaeus for second : see Notes. dicto adeost Lachmann others, Leo, who makes the metre the same as he does in the previous verse and two following verses.—16. Sotadean. W. Christ l. c. changes operis to operae, but there is resolution in the second syllable of both the Ionici. LG quite unreasonably condemn the verse, and Leo changes Ipsé to ipsus to suit his erroneous theory.—17. So aéquom esse putát, non reputát laboris quíd sit, ergo ín servitúte expetúnt multa iníqua: 20

 habéndum et ferúndum hoc onúst cum labóre.

M: another Sotadean. LG quite wrongly give Quidque for quodcumque, apparently to make the verse bacchiac; and with the same view Leo suggests acciderit.—18. A normal Sotadean, bracketed by LG: Leo wrongly reads esse aequom against the order of M. But aequom seems to contradict the next verse and may have come from aequom there: id quom may be the true reading.—19-25. Bacchiacs.—21. opus M, onus B₂, Cam.—22 and 23 as far as liber are given as one verse in M.—22. This verse may be scanned as Ionic a minore or as a Bacchiac trimeter. The verse is generally made to end at liber: and hodié qui fuerim liber would be an Anacreontean (Iamb. dimeter catalectic): so Leo. LG with Ritschl write Qui hodié fuerim liber scanned as two bacchii.—23. From eum in 23 to the end of 24 forms one verse in M.—24. potuit M, potirit B₂, Cam.—natus est M, Nonius, p. 43.—quaeritur (queritur) M, quaeritur Nonius; queritur vulgo, which probably 'came from two lines above. I venture to write quíritat or queretur? This is a simple restoration of the Bacchiac metre. conqueritur LG; Leo writes hic quóm uerna nátust without any verb: both of these editors seek to make the metre to be bacchiac, as I do. Spengel who, I think rashly, denies the existence of trimeter bacch., writes vernā abl., making the vs. an anapaestic dimeter.—26. uernauerbero M, rightly cf. 4. 2. 13, uere uerbero Ritschl, LG, Leo: uerus uerbero Ussing. Nonius, p. 43, quotes the verse before this for verna, adding “habebatur hoc nomen pro vitabili maledicto.” nunc uero M: but Gellius N. A. I. 7. 17 on the Ciceronian phrase in potestatem fuit and Nonius s.v. numero quote the words before us as numero mihi in mentem fuit. Ussing reads nunc sero: Leo gives num numero mi, LG say that numero is ironical: for the true explanation see Notes. Before seeing the truth, I was inclined to read uerberonum in numero: taking mihi in mentem fuit to imply that Sosia had forgotten to return thanks to the gods as he had intended.—28. studeam B pr.—gratias M, corr. Rein, Langen.—29. occillet M, vulgo: oscillet Gloss. Osbern. ossillet Dousa. suggillet Scriverius, Ussing. occillet is probably right, standing to occo as conscribillo to conscribo. LC suggest that the true form may be occilio as Gloss. Cyrill. has βωλοκόπος occiliator: βωλοστροφῶ occo, occilio: but these are probably false readings.—30. qui BD, fecerunt M: this is the only trisyllabic perfect in -erunt in Plautus which makes its penult

Leo suspects the verse. Ritschl and Mueller agree with Fleck.—36. Qui M, corr. Scal.—populo M, corr. Par.—38. eri mei M, mei eri Fleck. LG: but perhaps Bothe was right in reading auspiciod: Leo wishes to read Imperiod auspiciod, which he thinks may have been a formula. Cf. next verse.—maxime M, which is very weak, in fact implies an untruth: perhaps maximi is right. maxima Scal., joining it with praeda in next v. In Trin. 3. 2. 21 maxime is changed to maxima by Ritschl.—39. Praeda atque agro adoriaque M: Leo thinks praedat agro adoriad may have been an old formula and the true reading: this I think very likely, but qui should be written after adoriad for que. Qui praeda agroque adoriaque LG: Praeda atque agro qui adoriaque Ussing.—40. suum M.—41. hanc ut Reiz, LG.—43-45.

B₁, seducunt B₂.—67. instruximus legiones item M. Leo, with Spengel, moves Legiones, item to the beginning of 68, making that line a trochaic sept., and this seems best. Ussing omits legiones item as a gloss, and is followed in this by LG. nostros Bothe, but the gloss would not have been inserted had not nostras been read. Ussing well defends nostras.—68. legiones suas M, suas legiones LG.—69. in medium M, medii scripsi. uterque imperator Bothe, LG. Cf. 66 supra.—80. uulneris ui et uirium M, uirum D pr, uolnerum ui uiri Lach., LG, uolneris ui uiri Seyffert. Leo says “aliud latet.” I give pulveris for vulneris, otherwise closely adhering to D pr. This reading will be defended in the Commentary.—81. vorimus Bent.—82 and 83 as one verse M.—83. Vicinus ui feroces M, (ferocis) E. Leo omits uicinus with Spengel, making ui feroces a trochaic clausula, like iure iniustas 90 infra, and I follow him. If the cretic metre is to be preserved, either Vicinus vi feri or Vicinus vi truces may be right.—84. So M, and so the verse is cited by Nonius, p. 480, who says “convortitur pro convortit.” The possibility of this is denied by Ussing, who reads sic tamen: doubted by LG, who give In fugam sed tamen with Lind. Leo obelizes the verse, and proposes Sed fuga haud fit tamen.—85. Nonius, p. 393, 8, cites this verse to prove that statim in this sense has the first syllable long: of course this passage does not prove it.—86. animum or animom M, animam Jm. — 88. meus om. The true construction of the passage has not been seen. The sentence uno ut labore absolvat aerumnas duas is subject to fieret. Nonius, s. v. expetere has sua si quid culpa—ut sinat.—36. The mss. so write the verse: the hiatus after Alcumena is easily curable by adding d with Ritschl: but that after Cum is difficult to remedy. Guyet condemned the verse, and it is certainly spurious; but so is the previous line. Instant silence should follow vs. 34. The end of scenes is the favourite ground for the interpolator. Half the scenes in the Asinaria have spurious verses tacked on to them. simul cum Alcumena sua Mueller, LG.

to the prevailing key. LG reduce the whole passage to bacchiacs, with the exception of the clausula, vs. 21. Leo usually retains the variations as in the MSS. considering them to be Iambic cola.—2. ita cuique comparatum est M. This is a common variation of Ionic a minore, which itself might be a variation of bacchiac metre, as in Act 1. Sc. 1. Leo regards ita ... comparatumst as an Iambic colon. ita quoiquest in aetate hominum comparatum LG, with Reiz and Hermann. hominum M, homonum Leo; this is much the simplest cure.—3. dis M, which Spengel retains scanning itā: see Commentary. divis Leo: complacitum Hermann.—4. ut is omitted in the MSS., but D has incommodū, and as ut seems wanted I insert it here. Ussing noticing the awkwardness of the construction reads Atque for Quin. Leo suggests aderit for adsit.—quod B₁D₂E.—6. mihi potestas videndi fuit M: fuit mi potestas videndi Hermann, LG: potestas videndi fuit mi Bothe. Leo follows M, treating virí mei mihi potestas as an Iambic colon.—7. If the whole verse is bacchiac something has fallen out before hinc. I have supplied dudum: cf. vs. 67. a med hodie, LG. Leo treats hinc ante lucem as an Iambic colon. Hermann wrote nunc hinc.—S. mihi M: as nunc is only added over the line in B, Ussing prefers to write videor nunc.—The hiatus of nunc is legitimate.—9. Plus aegri M: Aegri plus is suggested by Leo, a simple correction. LG write hoc abitu. exaltabitu D, ex abitu mei Loman, ex baetitu A. Spengel.—coepe M.—10. quam M, quom Pareus, F (quum). quod Z, forgetting that quom is the Plautine particle in this sense. In order to avoid scanning perduelles as a quadrisyllable, Leo makes sed hoc me beat a separate verse, thus scanning saltem ... reuenit as a hexameter bacchiac. In M from Plus aegri to beat is in one verse.—12. Hermann followed by LG wrongly omits Id solatiost (solatio est M).—dum modo M, modo om. Bothe, rightly I think.—saltem to absit makes one verse in M., and dum ... usque one verse, M.—14. abitu M, abitus scripsi; this easily restores the rhythm, and I think improves the sense. Leo makes abitu eius animo an Iambic colon.—mercedes M; mercede might occur to some; but Virgil's Huic aliud mercedis erit establishes the vulgate.—

EJZ have the grave corruption reducat, which has led to Guyet's reclueat, and, I presume, to Pareus's praecclueat.—ducam B₁D pr. dicam EmZ, corr. Pius.—16. Onions adds praemiorum. Leo leaves the verse as in the mss., making it a catalectic bacchiac. LG write : Virtus optimum praemiumst optumorum. Fleckeisen gave Salis mi esse ducam, optumúmst praemium virtus with a very unlikely synizesis in praemium : for the laws of synizesis are strict in bacchiac metre.—17. ante it B₁D corr. ante id D pr. E.—18. hac. om. M. I insert it : some ablative denoting virtue is necessary to the sense, and hac, which might easily have fallen out here, restores the rhythm as well as the sense. Hermann proposed Et patria, and this is accepted by LG ; but Et patria et is a most improbable bacchiac. Leo takes patria et prognati to be an Iambic colon.—21. A clausula of uncertain metre : Iambic, according to Mueller. I should rather regard it as a variation of the bacchiac metre (see above), consisting of a third Paeon and a molossus. In M the verses in the above canticum end as follows : agunda | hominum | con-

Pylades proposed to omit sim, Camerarius to omit iam, and so vulgo. I doubt whether the passage is fully cleared up. Granting that iam is the result of dittography, whence comes the sa in D? If I mistake not, it is the last syllable of ansa, the first syllable of which is disguised in iam. If this be so, we must strike out sim, which was supplied by the

This verse is too long in M, which give Numquam edepol tu mihi divini quicquam creduis post hunc diem, with the variation of credius for creduis in B₁. and of quam with quic written above for quicquam in D. The best correction seems to be to omit quicquam with Bothe: see Notes. Ussing gave posthac creduis: LG suggest making divini a dissyllable (dini) with other changes: so Truc. 2. 2. 52 Ussing makes divinarum trisyllabic.—41. occepto M, occepso Nonius, quoting this passage under occepso and under trahere: under anima he quotes it with the corruption hoccepsio. occepero would remedy the hiatus, but the tradition is decisive for occepso. LG insert semel before occepso, eliding Ni and ego. Leo does not notice the hiatus: Mueller brings down the superfluous iam from the last verse but one, see supra, and places it after occepso. EJF have animo. Nonius here draws from a better archetype than our mss.: the analogy of rocifero rumigero defends rumifero, as Ussing says.—47. expectatun B, expectatū ne (ne erased) D. LG, Ussing, and Leo agree in punctuating at magis: wrongly, I think.—48. Expectatum meum B₁, Expectatu meum D, Expectatum eum B₂, and there seems no sufficient objection to this, which is the vulgate. Expectatum suum LG: expectatun? em Leo.—haud quiquam M: but as Alcmena only is spoken of Fleckeisen proposes haud quaquam = haud quaquam, and this all recent edds. accept. Between this verse and 1035 (iv. 3. 1) Vos inter vos (vos) partite: ego abeo mihi negotium est, there was a large and never sufficiently to be deplored lacuna in the archetype of our mss. Of this gap B preserves no trace: D leaves the remainder of the page blank, the space of seven verses: E leaves a space of two lines. The lost portion included the end of this scene: a whole scene in which Alcumena expostulates with Amphitruo: a whole scene during which (MERC.) Érus Amphitruost occupatus.

Amphitruo and Jupiter mutually accuse each other of being a seducer : the greater portion of the scene in which Blepharo is appealed to as an arbiter to decide which is really Amphitruo. The gap must have included three or four leaves of the archetype at least. Nineteen fragments, most, if not all, certainly belonging to this part of the play, sixteen of them being from citations of Nonius, have been collected by editors. These are here given in what seems to me the most likely order, an order differing somewhat both from that of LG and of Leo, whose order is referred to in the note. The fragments are grouped in four divisions, corresponding to the scenes supposed to be missing.

FR. 1. (1 LG, Leo.) Nonius, p. 342 : mactare malo afficere: Plautus Amphitryone : 'At ego certo cruce et cruciatum mactabo exuo mastigia.' Pylades added te, and corrected cruciatu. Ussing rightly strikes out certo. exuo is very difficult to explain : in my opinion Nonius has given us a mixture of two lines, which it would be presumptuous to restore : I will merely hint that they may have been something of this sort :

At ego te cruce et cruciatu mactabo mox, Sosia.

Faciam ut prae dolore sanguinem exuomas mastigia.

I have at least accounted for exuo, which may well have been the first part of exuomas, the last syllable of which—mas—was lost before mastigia.

FR. 2. (2 LG, Leo.) Nonius, p. 354, 5, occupatus. st added by Hoffmann.

FR. 4. (15 LG, 3 Leo.) Priscian I, p. 564: 'quamvis Plautus 'abiendi' dixit pro 'abeundi' in Amphitryone.' LG have rightly restored abitendi. The words may have been part of Mercury's impertinence to Amphitruo.

FR. 5. (3 LG, 4 Leo.) Nonius, p. 543, s. aula.

FR. 6. (4 LG, 5 Leo.) Nonius, p. 543, matella: aquarium vas. Plautus in Amphitryone, Ne tu postules matulam unam tibi aquam infundi in caput. We should, I think, change unam to urnam, aquam infundi to aquai fundam.—postulas Schroeder, vulgo.

Luc. as from the Amphitryo. tu plus] plus Priscian I. 168 (al. codd., effodi duplos) : Priscian, I. 320 duplus (al. codd. duplos). tu plus Hertz, duplos Bothe, which offends against the laws of comic metre, the first syllable being short by nature.—in die Schroeder LG.

FR. 9. (11 LG, 7 Leo.) Nonius, p. 105 s. v. exiurare.

FR. 10. (12 LG, 8 Leo.) ACT V. SC. 1.—BRONIA ANCILLA AMPHITRIO B, ANCILLA AMPHITRIO D. The metre of the first 9 vss. is Iamb. octonarian.—1. The poorer mss. also Z give Dapes for spes, being a ridiculous attempt to fill up pes*, the first letter being, as often, omitted for the colourer in the archetype, as it still remains in D. Such mistakes are frequent in mss.—2. ula D, confidentiam B, DE.—3. me Guyet.—concoqui Ussing.—4. iam ut enicer Guyet. inicier B, inicer E, enecer m.—6. Anapaestic octonarius.—propere, M, which I have changed to prope. LG keep the ms. reading, making the v. hypercatalectic with Spengel. Leo with Hermann writes subito ut, propere, ut valide. But propere is a weak development of subito, and though suddenness may be attributed to a clap of thunder, haste cannot. The shortening of ut before valide is not illegitimate in Plautine anapaestic metre: see Commentary.—11. Iambicoctonarius. crepitu is omitted by Bothe, perhaps rightly.—13. NOTES.

THE ARGUMENTS.

THERE was formerly a double set of Arguments to the plays of Plautus : a non-acrostich and an acrostich set. Of the non-acrostich set all but five have perished ; those of the Amphitruo, Aulularia, Miles, Mercator, and Pseudolus, which last is preserved in the Ambrosian ms. alone : this ms. also preserves some traces of an argument to the Persa. Both these sets of arguments are much later than Plautus. Ritschl (Prol. Trin. p. 316 sqq.) refers the non-acrostich arguments to the times of the Antonines. These Arguments are all comprised in fifteen verses, except that of the Amphitruo, which has only ten. Now it is known that the Arguments of the plays of Terence, each in twelve verses, and the poem containing the arguments of the twelve books of the Aeneid, each in six verses, were the work of Sulpicius Apollinaris of Carthage, who lived about the middle of the second century A.D. Hence Ritschl has attributed the Plautine Arguments also to Sulpicius, and this conjecture is now generally accepted. An earlier age may perhaps have given birth to the Acrostich Arguments. During the 7th century A.U.C. (about 100 B.C.), the study of Plautus was much affected by grammarians at Rome. Among these Aurelius Opilius has been pitched on by Osann as a likely person to have written the Acrostich Arguments. Opilius gave up his school at Rome about 92 B.C., to accompany his friend Rutilius Rufus, condemned for extortion, to Asia. Gellius (3. 3. 1) mentions him as an author of indices on Plautus. He wrote a book called Pinax, with his own name Opilius in an acrostich on the title page. This book Pinax is supposed to have treated of Plautine subjects. Osann's guess is a happy one ; but it has scarcely as great certainty as that of Ritschl respecting the authorship of the five Acrostich Arguments. (On the question see Ritschl's Prol. Trin. 316 sqq. and his Parerga, vol. 2.)

Ritschl remarks generally of the metrical skill shown in the composition of the Arguments: cum prologis non Plautinis hoc ii commune habent quod prorsus Plautina numerorum arte facti sunt (Prol. Trin. p. 316). And again, apage illorum inertiam, qui quod in Plauto vix sint toleraturi imputare tamen argumentis Plautinis non vereantur. These remarks certainly go too far. No doubt the imitators of Plautus did their best to observe his rules. But they could not, and certainly did not thoroughly apprehend those rules. Nor did the author of the Prologues, although his composition will bear a stricter scrutiny than that of the authors of the Arguments. Both the Prologues and the Arguments, however, come near, though they do not quite attain to the precision of their model, and the wonder is that their mistakes are so few, not that they are so many.

Ritschl asks: why not emend the violations of law found in the Arguments when you will emend Plautus himself? The answer is that the faults in the Arguments are more numerous in proportion than those in the text of Plautus: that they belong to certain classes as (1) false quantities, see Crit. Note on Arg. 1. 3; (2) freer use of hiatus than Plautus himself permitted (especially in the Acrostich Arguments); (3) non-observance of metrical niceties: for instance a dactyl precedes an anapaest, Cist. Arg. 1; (4) mistaken views on points of Plautine scansion, as Itaque, Cist. Arg. 11. The Arguments and the Prologues should be emended so far as to bring them within the general rules of the Iambic metre: to force Plautus's own special rules on them would result in producing something quite different from what the authors wrote.

ARGUMENT I.

1. Amphitruonis: Although the MSS. do not preserve this form, the writer of the Acrostich Argument makes the eighth letter to be u: and although, as Üssing suggests, he may have been compelled to do this by the fact that no Latin word begins with y, yet it is probable that Amphitruo, or perhaps Amñtruo, was the true Plautine form. The ancient Romans seem to have written u for v, though u (long) was in the best age reserved to represent ov. Fleckeisen invariably writes Argurippus, sucophanta, turanus and the like : but I am not aware that our mss. in any instance support these spellings.

Goetz has classified the spellings in our mss. of the name Amphitruo through the play. The result is that D gives -itrio 68 times, never -ytrio ; B -itrio 66 times, 5 times -ytrio ; that E and J nearly reverse these proportions in favour of -ytrio ; but no ms. gives any instance of a form ending in -tryo. The testimony of the mss. of Nonius is rather in favour of Amfitryo according to Mueller.

2. dum ... gereret : cf. Virg. Aen. 1. 5, dum conderet urbem : Georg. 4. 457, dum te fugeret per flumina praeceps : Aen. 10. 800, Dum genitor nati parma protectus abiret : Prop. 2. 26. 47, Testis Amymon latices dum ferret in arvis (so N). All these however convey a sense of struggle or effort on the part of the subject towards a certain object, and gereret here sounds distinctly unclassical. Telebois : it is uncertain where Plautus conceived the Teleboae to be. His notions of geography were not very exact. According to Strabo, 10. 2. 4, they were considered the same as the Taphians and Cephalenians, inhabitants of islands off the coast of Acarnania. The Taphii are called φιλήρεται and ληίστορες in the Odyssey 1. 181 ; 15. 427 ; and we find that this play represents Amphitruo as having returned by sea from his conquest. See Note on ex portu Persico, 1. 1. 250.

The conquest of the Teleboae by Amphitruo is mentioned by Herodotus 5. 59, who tells us that he himself saw at Thebes a tripod which had in Cadmean letters the following inscription :

Ἄμφιτρώων μὲν ἀνέθηκε νέων ἀπὸ Τηλεβοάων.

and by Pindar, Nem. 10, 24, θρέψε δ' αἰχμὰν Ἀμφιτρώωνος· ὁ δ' ὄλβω φέρτατος

ἵκετ' ἐς κείνου γενεάν ἐπεὶ ἐν χαλκείοις ὄπλοις

Τηλεβόας ἔναρεν· τῷ δ' ὄψιν εἰδόμενος ἀθανάτων βασιλεὺς αὐτὰν ἐσῆλθεν

σπέρμ' ἀδείμαντον φέρων Ἡρακλῆος.

3. Alcmenam : Alcumena is the only form in the play. It was customary to insert u between c and m in names taken from Greek. So Alcumeus from Ἀλκμαίων, Capt. 3. 4. 30. Marius Victorinus, quoted by Ribbeck, Frag. Scen. 1. 228, iuxta autem non ponebant c m: inde nec Alcumenam dicebant nec Tecmesam, sed Alcumenam [et Tecumesam]; inde Alcumeo et Alcumena [et Tecumesa] tragoediae; donec Iulius Caesar, qui et Vopiscus et Strabo et Sesquiculus dictus est, primus de Tecmesa scripsit tragoediam suam et in scaena pronuntiari iussit. A similar principle is seen at work in Aesculapius, Hercules, drachuma, etc.

ARGUMENT II.

1. Alcumenas: an affected archaism, and, according to Ritschl, Prol. Trin. p. 319, an erroneous affectation: for Plautus, according to Ritschl, never used the genitive in -as save in familias (certum est illius genitivi si ab uno familias recesseris usum prorsus desiisse). Ritschl, however, changed his mind on this point, as on various others, and has (N.P.E. p. 115) defended or introduced genitives in as in several places—Pseud. 4. 6. 38, molae coloniam; Bacch. 2. 3. 73, Dianae Ephesiae; Pers. 3. 3. 5, pecunias accipiter; even terrais odium, Bacch. 4. 7. 22. So he proposed formas for formae, accepted by Tyrrell, Mil. 4. 4. 12, where he read in his edition formae il. See note on familias infra, 2. 2. 199.

2. formam eius coniugis. Hiatus is more common in the Acrostich Arguments than in the other set. I have counted some twelve or thirteen of them, and of these nine or ten are of syllables ending in -m. No doubt hiatus of syllables ending in -m was less offensive than others, but Plautus did not carry it to this extent; and the author of the Argument was probably misled by the hiatus of monosyllables ending in -m in the first syllable of a resolved arsis, to extend the license to other words also.

4. ei in Plautus and Terence has a three-fold scansion; as a monosyllable, an iambus, or spondee: the last most commonly, Tyrrell, Miles, Arg. 1. 4.

5. frustra habet, 'bemocks,' 'makes fools of,' cf. frustra sunt, 3. 3. 19; frustratur, 2. 2. 198.

6. turbas ciet, 'blows up'; cf. turbas concire, 1. 2. 14, note.

7. invicem raptant, 'they mutually arraign each other as adulterers'; raptare is properly to hale to the judgment seat: hence to 'arraign,' 'accuse.' So Propertius, whose phraseology and idioms often recall his Umbrian countryman, Plautus, 3. 11. 27: Nam quid ego heroas quid raptem in crimina divos?

8. Blepharo: the name of Amphitruo's pilot; derived from βλέπειν, signifying a man who keeps a good look-out ahead. captus arbiter, 'appointed arbitrator.' Capere arbitrum is the regular expression. Truc. 2. 7. 68, arbitrum aequom ceperim.

Amphitruo: this trajectory is neither un-Plautine nor unusual in the best age, cf. Prol. 84, and Munro's note on Lucr. 3. 843, referred to by Ussing; and a valuable collection by Mr. Housman, Journal of Philology, 18, p. 6-8.

THE PROLOGUE.

A great part of this Prologue is not by Plautus himself; perhaps none of it is by him. This conclusion is to be deduced from internal evidence, assisted by a comparison with some other Prologues of Plautus, which are evidently later than the poet himself. The main historical fact, which proves part at least of this, as well as other Prologues, to be later than Plautus, is the frequent reference to seats in the theatre: found in this Prologue vs. 65: Capt. Prol. 12; Poen. Prol. 20. Now we know that in 154 B.C. the Senate, on the motion of Scipio Nasica, ordered the stone theatre begun by the censor Cassius Longinus to be demolished, and at the same time passed a decree "that no one should place seats or be seated at a theatrical representation within a mile of the city" (Val. Max. 2. 4. 2, referred to by Ussing). It must have been some time after this that the practice of having seats became general, and that rows of wooden seats were arranged throughout the cavea.

If we compare other Prologues, we find that they themselves confess that they are not from the hand of Plautus. In the Prologue to the Menaechmi, vs. 3, the actor says:

Adporto vobis Plautum lingua non manu.

With this agrees the last line of the Prologue of the Pseudolus:

Plautina longa fabula in scaenam venit.

But the most express and important testimony is that furnished by the Prologue to the Casina, 5 sqq.:

Qui utuntur vino vetere sapientes puto
 Et qui libenter veteres spectant fabulas.
 Nam, nunc novae quae prodeunt comoediae
 Multo sunt nequiores quam nummi novi.
 Nos postquam populi rumorem intelleximus, Studiose expetere vos Plautinas fabulas,
 Antiquam eius edimus comoediam
 Quam vos probastis qui estis in senioribus :
 Nam iuniorum qui sunt non norunt, scio.
 Haec quom primum actast vicit omnis fabulas.
 Ea tempestate flos poetarum fuit
 Qui nunc abierunt hinc in communem locum.

This Prologue tells us almost in express terms that Plautus was dead : and expressly tells us that the Casina had been first acted too long ago for the younger men to remember, though the elder men had seen it. That is to say, the Prologue was written somewhere about thirty or forty years after the first representation of the play. In fact it was written during a Plautine revival which took place somewhere about the time of the third Punic War : a revival which was perhaps created by the comedies of Terence. These were too few in number to satisfy the popular appetite, and perhaps they were found deficient in the broad humour which the older men remembered in Plautus. Now any one who reads the Prologues of the Amphitruo, Casina, Menaechmi, Poenulus, and Captivi, cannot fail to come to the conclusion that they are by the same hand. There is, in all these Prologues, the same disposition to chat with, and to talk "gag" to the audience, to take the spectators into confidence, and to make everything obligingly clear to them.

Those five Prologues then, to the Amphitruo (in great part), to the Menaechmi, Casina, Poenulus, and Captivi, are not by Plautus, but were written about a generation after his death, about 150 B.C. The Prologues to the Aulularia, Rudens, Trinummus, in which a god, to the Truculentus, in which the author himself, by the mouth of an actor, briefly addresses the audience, are probably genuine : possibly too the Prologue to the Mercator, spoken by Charinus, one of the characters.

The remaining plays have no Prologue: though in the Miles and Cistellaria a Prologue is practically put in the mouth of an actor at a later stage of the play.

1. Mercury speaks in his character of messenger of Jupiter and god of bargains: κερδῶνος, ἐπιούριος. Mercurius is from the root of merx. Cp. Horace, Sat. 2. 3, where Damasippus got the surname of Mercurialis from his cleverness in driving bargains. vos vobis voltis: note the alliteration, a characteristic of early Latin, as of early English poetry, that of Spenser for instance. See Munro's Lucretius, Introd. p. 15. It is extremely common in Ennius, Plautus, and Lucretius. Munro cites from Captivi, 4. 3. 3:

Quanta pernis pestis veniet, quanta labes larido,
Quanta sumini apsumedo, quanta callo calamitas, Quanta laniis lassitudo, quanta porciniis.

4. rationes, 'plans,' 'speculations.' vostrorum = vostrum, vostrum. So Most. 1. 3. 123: pars vostrorum; Aul. 2. 4. 42: uter vostrorum. Cf. Pseud. 2. 1. 9. So nostrorum, infra, Frag. 18; Poen. 4. 2. 39. Even the feminine forms, nostrarum and vostrarum, are used: see Truc. 2. 1. 40; Pseud. 1. 2. 53; Stich. 1. 2. 84; Ter. Eun. 4. 4. 11; Hec. 2. 1. 43. Can these genitives be derived from the colloquial use of noster as = ego? See infra on noster, 1. 1. 245.

5. expedire, intransitive, 'to turn out.' Cf. 1. 3. 23: nequiter paene expedivit prima parasitatio. Langen has pointed out that expetivit, the conjecture of Lambinus, will not suit the latter passage, as expetere is rather 'to befall,' and is used with in, 1. 2. 33, or with dative, as 3. 1. 12, infra; but not with adverbs denoting ill, well. So expedivit must be sound: and if sound with nequiter, it may be sound with bene in the same sense. There is therefore no reason to take expedire transitively here, 'to further,' 'bless,' with Ussing: even less to read me before it with him. peregrī, 'abroad.' Peregre is the form correctly used of going abroad, or of coming from abroad: Charisius, p. 212, Keil. The forms were, however, confounded in mss. peregrique et: Ussing quotes several other instances of -que et from Plautus.

6. auctare: properly used of divine blessing. Catull. 67. 2, Salve teque bona Iuppiter auctet ope.

9. ea adferam ea ut nuntiem: for the trajection of ut see Crit. Note.

11. iam scitis, 'you know by this time': 'it is an old story': 'I need not remind you,' is the force. Iam is thus often joined with novi. Prop. 2. 24. 45, Iam tibi Iasonia nota est Medea carina; Cic. Att. 5. 12, Iam nosti ἀφρακτα Rhodiorum.

12. nuntiis: Mercury was the messenger of Jupiter: Virg. Aen. 1. 297. For lucro see on vs. 1. praesim: the omission of ut after facio, and other verbs of causing, after verbs of asking, commanding, and allowing, is frequent in Plautus. Cf. sivi viverent, Mil. 1. 1. 50; impetravi abiret, Trin. 2. 4. 190. This use was continued in classical times with many verbs, as mando, curo, iubeo, video. The case before us does not, however, sound quite Plautine: perhaps because of the distance of praesim from concessum est et datum, and perhaps because this syntax is rare after a passive verb.

13. adprobare, 'to bless'; a sense in which approbare is often applied to the gods: as in the phrase di adprobent: haec means the res rationes of vs. 4.

The asyndeton is a feature of Plautus's style. It often is found between two words: two verbs here, and Mil. 2. 1. 59, adhortatur, iuvat; Men. 2. 2. 67, se adplicant, adglutinant; Trin. 2. 2. 8, turbant, miscent; Mil. 4. 5. 17, spernit segregat; ib. 3. 1. 93, suscitet dicat; ib. 2. 2. 46, curans cogitans; Bacch. 2. 3. 12, vivit valet; ib. 3. 3. 3, perdidit pessumdedit; ib. 9. 7, cepi expugnavi. Between two nouns: Mil. 3. 1. 52, sputator, screator; Truc. 2. 2. 63, blandimentis hortamentis; Rud. Prol. 23, donis hostiis; Epid. 3. 4. 14, armis, arte duellica; Men. 5. 9. 73, miseriis laboribus. Brix on Trin. 2. 1. 17, and Trin. 2. 2. 21. This feature reappears in Cicero's letters, as do many features of comic style, as has been clearly pointed out by Tyrrell in his edition.

15. facietis: Ussing calls this futurum pro imperativo, but it is a true future: for the sentence introduced by ut 'as' is as much a condition as if it were introduced by si.

16. itaque, i.e. et ita. arbitri: 'judges,' 'umpires,' βραβεῖς: διαίτηται: hence arbitrium. The other sense of arbiter, 'a witness,' 'a spectator,' is several times found in Plautus, cf. Capt. 2. 1. 17; sine hisce arbitris, 'in private.'

Both senses may be combined here. The word is derived from ar (= ar) and the root of bito.

17. venio ... venerim. Ussing shows in a sensible note that the indicative and subjunctive were indiscriminately used in indirect questions in early Latin, and adds quid intersit quaerere nimiae subtilitatis videtur, a remark in which I cordially concur. He quotes the following passages where the two different moods are used depending on the same principal verb:—Most. 1. 3. 42, me vide quae sim et quae fui ante; Cist. 1. 1. 58, eloquere utrumque nobis, et quid tibi est et quid velis nostram operam, etc. See my note on Hor. Sat. 2. 4, 38. Ignarum quibus est ius aptius, and Postgate on Propert. 1. 2. 9, where he states that “in old Latin the distinction between facts regarded as facts and conceptions had not been evolved.”

19. Iovis, may be scanned either as a pyrrhic, by elision of s, or a monosyllable, by synizesis.

20. oratum, ‘to plead,’ without an accusative. orare is often used intransitively in Plautus, orare mecum, tecum. In Ennius, etc., orator is often ‘an ambassador,’ ‘a pleader.’

21. tam etsi, best written as two words, 3. 3. 22; so neutiquam must be written ne utiquam, as the first syllable is short, see Capt. 3. 4. 54, etc. The construction is quod dictum foret pro imperio, ‘whatever was told you as a command.’

22. facturos: the ellipse of vos is Plautine, as Ussing points out, showing from many instances that the subject to an infinitive may be omitted, even when it refers to a different subject from that which governs the principal verb; but the ellipse here is very easy from vobis. quippe qui intellexerat: this is the ordinary case of quippe qui, save that it has here the indicative mood, which is not used by Cicero. For the peculiarly Plautine use see Note on 2. 2. 113.

24. precario, adverb, ‘by entreaty,’ opposed to quod foret dictum pro imperio.

25. dictis bonis, ‘kind words.’ Lambinus quotes Catullus 11. 15: Pauca nuntiate meae puellae non bona dicta.

26. ille Iuppiter: i.e. the actor who acted the part of Jupiter.

27. malum: in a double sense: the spectators, of course, fear malum, misfortune; the actor, being a slave, dreaded malum, punishment, if he acted badly. Malum is often the punishment of slaves, and for the chastisement inflicted on the actors if they played badly see Cist. Grex, ad fin.: Qui deliquit, vapulabit: qui non deliquit bibet.

29. sibi si praetimet: 'fears beforehand for himself.' Cf. Lucr. 3. 1018: At mens sibi conscia factis praemetuens adhibet stimulos, where see Munro's Note, ed. 4.

30. quoque etiam is frequent in Plautus, and occurs four times more in this play: Sl; 1. 1. 127; 2. 2. 70; 2. 2. 121: it usually is a strengthened quoque. sum: in prose of the golden age sim would be written, but in early Latin the distinction between the moods as expressing fact and reason was not observed: vs. 17, supra.

32. pacem: see Crit. Note. Pace would mean 'with goodwill,' ablative of accompanying circumstances. Prop. 1. 7. 26: Saepe venit magno fenore tardus amor. But pace is more adverbial, like iure: Ov. Fast. 2. 861: Iure venis, Gradive. Luc. 1. 191, quoted by Ussing, si iure venitis. Ussing adds salute, Bacch. 4. 9. 147; Men. 1. 2. 25.

34. iusta is governed by orator: 'an asker of just things.' This usage by which verbal nouns govern the case of the verb from which they are derived is very common in Plautus. It is generally, however, limited to verbals in -io, denoting the action of the verb, as Quid tibi hanc curatior rem aut muttitio 1. 3. 21 infra, where see Note. The particular case before us is best illustrated from Greek: as ἀπορα πρόπιος, Aesch. Prom. 905; τὸ πᾶν μῆχαρ οὔπιος Ζεύς. Suppl. 594, quoted by Sonnenschein on Most. 1. 2. 17, gnarures vos rolo esse hanc rem, which is the nearest Plautine parallel.

38. nunc iam: the writer of the Prologue had failed to observe that Plautus always made nunciam trisyllabic. See Note on 148 infra. loquār: the verbal ending -ar is always long in Plautus; there are three instances in this play: loquār here and at 2. 1. 9: opprimār 5. 1. 4. quaeloquar: adea is understood. The suppression of the antecedent is a common Plautine idiom. Cf. Mil. 2. 4. 2; Cedo vel decem edocebo Minime malas ut sint malae mihi solae quod superfit (i.e. ex eo quod). Ib. 4. 2. 87; Meri bellatores gignuntur, quas hic prægnatis facit (i.e. ex iis quas). Ibid. 3. 1. 98, on which passage see Tyrrell's notes.

41-45. Ussing first pointed out the true construction, which is sufficiently indicated by the punctuation. He did not, however, think it necessary to change omnibus although he saw that it was masc. and must be separated from benefactis. He writes: cur ego, inquit, aliorum exempla sequar ut et ipse enumerem quorum beneficiorum Iuppiter omnibus hominibus auctor sit? I think hominibus is necessary, and omnibus unnecessary.

42. Virtutem Victoriam. The temples of these goddesses are mentioned with others by Cicero N. D. 2. 2. 23. quis benefactis = quibus benefactis. This is a possessive dative, equivalent to a genitive. Ussing quotes Most. 1. 2. 9, ei rei argumenta dicam; Trin. 1. 2. 167, illorum verbis falsis acceptor fui; Asin. 2. 4. 20 (Mil. 3. 1. 140 is mistaken by both Lambinus and Ussing). The difference between such datives and those used in the best age in a sense scarcely distinguishable from a genitive, is that the latter refer to persons, not things. See Roby's list, Lat. Gram. part 2. p. 62. Horace, Sat. 1. 6. 71, reproduces this idiom: causa fuit pater his; as he reproduces many other colloquial idioms in his satires.

45. architectus. Plautus uses both the incorrectly Latinized form architectus as well as architecton. Similar adaptations of Greek names in -ων are Purpureus for Porphyryon in Naevius; Tranius as equivalent to Tranio in the Mostellaria (3. 1. 33); Electrus or Electrius for Electryon 99 infra: Alcmeus or Alcumeus for Alcmaeon (Ἀλκμέων) Capt. 3. 4. 30, etc. Cicero often uses architectus (which is the only form he uses) metaphorically, as De Fin. 1, 10, Ab illo inventore veritatis, et quasi architecto beatae vitae. Lambinus suggests that the actor who acted the part of Jupiter may have been a builder.

46. patri meo optumo: it is all but certain the line did not end with patri meo. It is a most rigid law that neither a trimeter or a trochaic septenarius may end with two Iambic words, or with an Iambic word preceded by a word ending in an Iambus. This rule was well known to the Prologue writers and Argument writers, and they never offend against it. In the case before us the line was incomplete, and optumo strikes me as a likely word to have dropped out. pater optumus maximus is well known, and pater optumus was not uncommon; Hor. Sat. 1. 4. 105, insuevit pater optimus hoc me; Ibid. 2. 1. 12, cupidum pater optime vires Deficiunt. Here optumus may be used with some reference to bonis in the next verse. It is not likely, as suggested in the Crit. Note, that pater meus formed an exception, as a common phrase, equivalent to one word, to the law stated. The only line which seems to suggest that idea, Men. 5. 1. 50, Negas novisse me? negas patrem meum, ending with three Iambic words is universally condemned, and meus pater is the usual order. I would write that verse thus, Negas novisse me? ignoras mēum patrem? Malam crucem and bona fide, which are both treated as one word, are the only certain exceptions. See A. Luchs, in Studemund's Studien, vol. 1.

47. exprobraret. Cic. Lael. 20. 71, odiosum sane genus hominum officia exprobrantium. Ter. Andr. 1. 1. 16, istaec commemoratio Quasi exprobratiost inmemori benefici. quod boni: the genitive is usually separated from quod in this phrase: Rud. 4. 7. 3, habeas quod di dant boni.

48. gratum: passive, 'received with thanks,' a meaning gratus often has. Ter. And. 1. 1. 15, et id gratum fuisse adversum te habeo gratiam; Pers. 4. 5. 3, Si quid bonis Boni fit esse idem grave et gratum solet. But Most. 1. 3. 63, Eundem animum oportet nunc mihi esse gratum ut impetravi can scarcely be sound: Sonnenschein concurs with me in thinking that oratum should be restored for gratum. a vobis 'on your part': the preposition is used because gratum is passive in sense = grato animo a vobis acceptum.

52. quid contraxistis frontem. Cf. Juv. 13. 215, densissima ruga cogitur in frontem. Lucilius speaks of a spectator (Nonius, p. 30), Verum tristis contorto aliquo ex Pacuviano exordio.

This passage by itself would show that tragedy was unpopular at Rome: and how could it be otherwise? Those stiff translations of Greek originals, without the Greek spirit, Greek local pride in mythical traditions, without the Greek religion which gave a meaning and an elevation to the whole, how could they be popular among earnest, simple, good-humoured Romans?

That it was attempted by most of the early poets only shows that they were unconscious how unsuitable Greek tragedy was to a Roman mind. Lucilius, Horace, and Persius severely criticised Roman tragedy, and derided the public who admired or pretended to admire it. For all that there was much lofty simplicity in Roman tragedy, and many fine lines have been handed down to us from it. If we can judge by fragments, Ribbeck's first volume, containing the fragments of tragedy, is, as a poetical storehouse, vastly richer than the second, which contains the fragments of comedy.

53. commutavero, almost = commutabo. The future perf. is thus frequently used in Plautus. Madvig, followed by Ussing, Lat. Gram. 340, 4, says it is = statim commutabo. I doubt the statim, and am rather disposed to agree with Roby, who says, § 1485, that "often in comic poets, and occasionally in later writers, it is used in principal or simple sentences, with but little, if any, difference from the simple future," though he discriminates certain shades of usage. If there is any distinction between the tenses, it is possible that the futurum exactum denotes greater certainty, rather than greater speed. The following are the instances from the comic writers quoted by Roby: Ter. Heaut. 1. 1. 34, Aut consolando aut consilio aut re iuvéro; And. 2. 3. 7, Dictum ac factum invenerit aliquam causam quam ob rem eiciat oppido; Plaut. Asin. 2. 2. 14, Erum in obsidione linquet inimicum animos auxerit; Plaut. Most. 3. 1. 157, huc concessero; Capt. 1. 2. 91, mox iuvéro. The usage is not very rare in Cicero. It is really like the Irish 'I'll be after doing so and so.' 'I'll be sure to' will often give its force.

55. omnibus isdem versibus. This line is enough to show that this part at least of the Prologue is not from the hand of Plautus. An anapaest must never be divided in Iambic or Trochaic metre, so that its first syllable, or two first syllables, form the last syllable or syllables of a polysyllabic word. Ritschl, who held, wrongly, that the first syllable of omnis was sometimes short, independent of position (Prol. p. 132), might see no difficulty here. But omnis never shortens its first syllable unless a monosyllable precedes, and unless that monosyllable, with the first syllable of omnis, makes up the arsis or thesis of a foot. See C. F. W. Mueller, Plaut. Pros. pp. 281, 367, 432.

56. utrum fit an non? 'Is it to be turned into a comedy or not? do you wish it?' cf. Juv. 4. 130: Quidnam igitur censet? conciditur: 'Is it to be cut up?' The deliberative pres. ind. is extremely common in comedy, and clearly belonged to the language of common life. Cf. Ter. Eun. 3. 1. 44, purgon ego me? Mil. 5. 13, Quam mox seco? Ibid. 7, Iamne in hominem involo? Ter. And. 2. 1. 15, adeon ad eum? Men. 2. 2. 45, an obsono amplius? Most. 3. 2. 87, eon? voco huc hominem? So in the common phrase quid ago? cf. Cic. Att. 13. 40, advolone an maneo? Cic. Or. 3. 5, Imusne sessum? I object to the ordinary reading, Utrum sit an non voltis? that it affords an involved construction, as may be seen on attempting to analyse it, whereas the reading of the best mss., fit, is simple. stultior: 'the more fool I to speak as if I were ignorant.' Ussing quotes Merc. 5. 2. 79, Ego stultior qui isti credam: Cist. 4. 2. 12, Non sum scitior quae hos rogem aut quae fatigem. The comparative sense is evidently not lost. The omission of sum here is in keeping with the usage of Plautus.

60. perpetuo, 'all out,' 'right through.'

65. conquaestores, 'detectives.' So Merc. 3. 4. 80, post ad praetorem ilico Ibo, orabo ut conquistores det mi in ricis omnibus. Elsewhere the word means 'recruiting officers.' subsellia. The first permanent theatre with seats was the stone theatre built by Pompey, B.C. 55. In 154 B.C. a stone theatre was being built by Cassius Longinus, censor, but was demolished by order of the Senate as being injurious to public morals, and it was ordered that no spectator at a theatrical performance within the city, or within a mile of it, should be seated; and before this time the audience looked on standing, or, it may be supposed, sometimes brought their own seats. It is, however, certain that when the Prologues of the Amphitruo, the Captivi, and the Poenulus were written there were regular seats; and Ritschl supposes that the rigid law referred to was not long in force, and that seats were permitted soon after 150 B.C., about which time the Plautine Prologues were, as he thinks, composed: Parerga, 1. p. 180, sqq. Ussing, Prol. p. 163.

66. caveam, the semicircular space in front of the stage: in a regular theatre on an incline, and divided by cunei, passages, from about seven to eleven in number: 'the theatre.'

Servius on Aen. 8. 636 (consessu caveae) quotes this passage, saying: cavea est ubi populus spectat.

67. favitores or fautores, 'claqueurs,' the regular meaning of the word. spectatoribus: this, and histrionibus in vs. 65, seem datives of the same sort as benefactis, vs. 42 supra, where see note.

68. pignus, 'as a security,' not to be returned except in case of their clearing themselves of the charge. Opponere pignori means to pawn, Pseud. 1. 1. 85; relucere pignus, 'to take a pledge out of pawn,' Caecil. Stat. 105 (Ribb.).

69. palmas: a palm branch was given by the managers of the play to the actor or actors whom the popular applause pronounced to have best played their part; also to the author of the play. Poen. Prol. 36 seqq.:

Quodque ad ludorum curatores attinet,
Ne palma detur quoiquam artificii iniuria,
Neve ambitionis causa extrudantur foras,
Quo deteriores anteponantur, boni.

Trin. 3. 2. 80, Facile pulmam habes hic victust: vicit tua comoedia. Livy tells us, 10. 47. 3, that at the Circensian games, B.C. 293, palmae tum primum translato e Graecia more victoribus datae. si qui... ambiissent: the pluperfect, like mandasset in vs. 83, is quite right. The sequence of imperfect and pluperfect subjunctive after even true perfects is quite correct: see Sonnenschein on Most. 89, Sale and others in Class. Review, vol. 3, No. 1, and cf. Ter. And. 1. 3. 14, Quidquid peperisset decreverunt tollere. Those who seek to bring in uniformity in the consecution of tenses by reading ambissit may not be right. Plautus loves variety in his consecution of tenses, and not only so, but has some consecutions which we should not expect. See Note on 1. 2. 25; 2. 2. 114.

72. adeo, 'further.' See Note on 2. 2. 46. aediles: exhibiting a munus of which a play would naturally form a part. perfidiose: it is not necessary to suppose an oath to judge fairly is implied; unfairness itself is perfidia.

73. sirempse, 'the same.' The formula siremps lex esto was used in ancient statutes: Lex Incert. reperta Bantiae, ap. Wordsworth, Frag. and Spec. p. 174: siremps lex esto quasci. Lex Rubria, ibid. p. 212: s(iiremps) lex ius causaque ... esto.

Lex Agraria, ibid. p. 194 : de eo agro siremps lex esto quansei is ager P. Mucio L. Calpurnio cos. publicus fuisset. Paulus in Festus, s.v., derives the word from similis re ipsa. The last part of the word is clearly eampse, the old form of ipsam; for the first part similis re and sic re have been proposed. See Wordsworth, Frag. and Spec. p. 108. I should rather suppose the first part to be from sei rei = ei rei : cf. sum, sos, sas for eum, eos, eas in Ennius. Charisius says, p. 153, 32, Keil, siremps per nominativum et ablativum declinatur ab hac sirempse; and he goes on : nisi forte adverbialiter loqui maluerint similiter lex esto. He seems wrong in not recognising the accusative.

74. magistratum is trisyllabic : it was doubtless slurred in ordinary pronunciation, and so was magister : and the French maître, maitre, represents the common pronunciation. So fenestra, minister, were often pronounced as if two syllables. A better line might be got by writing Quasi si magistratum sibi alterive ambaverint, eliding sibi ; see on 5. 2. 1. Laws de Ambitu date from a very early period in Roman history : Livy mentions enactments in 358, 181, 160 B.C. (Ussing).

79. sat habet favitorum semper qui recte facit : a Stoic sentiment ; virtue is its own reward : here limited to goodness in acting.

80. si illis fides est : i.e. if those who have charge of the matter act fairly : the aediles, above. In manu is a common Plautine phrase, meaning 'in one's power' ; see note on 2. 1. 14. The limitation of the general maxim of the previous verse is awkward, and I used to think the meaning of the verse was 'if we may trust those, who make that subject their concern,' i.e. 'virtue is its own reward if we may trust the philosophers and moralists.' But Poen. Prol. 51 seq. clearly proves the aediles to be meant : sin odios dicam tamen Si quidem licebit per illos quibus est in manu.

81. I have added is, i.e. 'he,' Jupiter. See Critical Note.

84. i.e. quominus alter placeret : see on Arg. 2. 8.

85. ornamenta et corium conciderent, 'cut his dress and his hide in pieces' with the scourge.

90. facere histrioniam, sc. artem, 'to turn actor.' So medicinam facere, 'to be a surgeon' ; argentariam facere, 'to be a banker'; carnificinam facere, 'to turn hangman,' Capt. 1. 2. 29; so facere mercaturam, unguentariam, piraticam, naviculariam, etc.

91. anno, 'last year,' hence annotinus: horno, 'this year,' hence hornotinus. The reference is evidently to some play in which Jupiter appeared as a deus ex machina. The only other passage in Plautus where anno certainly occurs is Merc. 1. 3. 22:

Quattuor minis ego istanc anno emi uxori meae.

Cf. Lucil. 28. 23: utrum anno an horno tute abstuleris a viro.

95. hoc animum advortite would be the really Plautine expression: see Crit. Note.

96. The form huiusce is only found in Plautus in Poen. 5. 4. 87, where both A and the other mss. give Huiusce fratris filius Agorastocles, where Schmidt has restored the proper name Iachonis or Iahonis, an almost certain emendation.

98. Argo = Argivo, Nonius, p. 487: cf. Eur. H. F. 2: Ἀργεῖον Ἀμφιτρύων ὄν Ἀλκαῖος ποτὲ ἔτικτε.

99. Electri, gen. of Electrus, or more probably Electrius, a Latinised form of Electryon: see on architectus, vs. 45 supra.

103. uxorem: the large number of instances in which uxor follows a hiatus according to the mss. has induced Koch to suggest a form uoxor, which is actually found in B in Trin. 800, Truc. 512. It will not scan in the latter passage. It is not accepted by critics.

104. nam, elliptical: (I need not tell you) for I suppose you know by this time. iam-novisse are to be joined together. See above, vs. 11.

105. liber harum rerum: cf. Ov. Her. 1. 80, revertendi liber; Hor. Sat. 1. 10. 21, seri studiorum; Ter. Ad. 4. 5. 61, ceterarum rerum socordem. So with credo 2. 2. 40 infra. This genitive of respect is extremely common in the comic writers, especially of mental emotions, as animi incertus, animi pendere, etc. For later instances see Roby, vol. 4. p. 130. Our own idiom is much the same, 'great of heart,' 'large of limb.'

108. usuram, 'the loan.'

115. adsimulavit se, 'has disguised himself' (similis).

117. schema, 'form': this word has a twofold peculiarity, it is declined of the first declension and the e is shortened, through the Aeolic σχέμα. Priscian quotes this passage for the form, adding Pers. 4. 2. 2, lepida condecorat schema; Caecilius (v. 76, Ribbeck), Filius in me incedit sat hilara schema. Nonius quotes Pomponius (150, Ribbeck). Other words thus declined were syрма (Valerius), diadema (Pomponius), dogma (Laberius), glaucoma, Mil. 2. 1. 70.

120. eccum and eccillum are often used even of those who are off the stage. Cf. Aul. 4. 10. 51, eccillam domi; Pers. 2. 2. 44, Ubi illa alterast furtifica laeva? PA. Domi eccam: nam huc nullam attuli, where there should not be a doubt as to the punctuation. eccum is not joined with est by Plautus, Langen says. But we are not to suppose eccum to be joined with est here: it is quite independent of it in construction, as it is of stat in Mil. 4. 6. 7, cited in note on l. 2. 35.

123. vorsipelles were properly those who, by means of magic, were able to transform themselves into wild animals, wolves especially, but in early Latin we several times meet it used of being able to assume any disguise. Quo libet genere se commutantes: Nonius. Lucil. 530 (Lach.), Quicum vorsipellis fio et quicum commuto omnia. In Pers. 2. 2. 48, capillus vorsipellis is hair which is turning grey. Bacch. 4. 4. 12, vorsipellem frugi convenit esse hominem pectus quoi sapit, i.e. ready to adapt himself to circumstances.

125. Amphitruone. The hiatus after the long proper name is justifiable. in exercitum: Plautus often shortens the syllable ex- in this position, i.e. when a monosyllable, or a monosyllable by elision, precedes, which with the syllable ex- makes up the arsis or thesis of a foot. See Mueller, Prol. Plaut. p. 281, 311 seqq.

126. praeservire. The preposition denotes readiness to meet his master's wishes. Lucil. 910 (Lach.), praeservit, labra delingit delenit amore, used, apparently, of a fond wife.

132. complexus: sc. eam. The omission of the antecedent is quite Plautine. See on vs. 38 supra.

133. 'illi': there = illic: Plautus uses both forms. ad legionem, 'with the army.' Legio several times = exercitus in Plautus, a relic of the time when one legion formed the Roman army. Cf. Truc. 2. 6. 27, Iam magnus? iamne it ad legionem? equae spolia rettulit?

143. petasus (πετάσνυμι): a hat with a broad brim, worn by travellers. Mercury is represented with such a hat with wings (pinnulae) at the sides. These are absent in Sosia's hat. For petasus cf. Pseud. 2. 4. 45, Etiam opus chlamyde et machaera et petaso; causia (Mil. 4. 4. 42; Pers. 1. 3. 75) was also a broad-brimmed hat to keep off the sun, from καίω.

144. torulus: probably 'a tassel,' θύσανος, hanging under Jupiter's hat. Varro, L. L. 5. 157 has—Torulus: in mulieris capite ornatus. This would probably mean the ball of made-up hair at the back of the head. Torus seems to have meant originally a cord, or a strand in a rope. Cato, R. R. 135, (funis) tres habeat toros. Colum. 11. 3. 6, tori funiculorum. Hence torus came to be applied to muscles, which resemble ropes.

148. Neither illic here, making its first syllable short, not in accordance with Plautus's special rules, nor illic in 149, a spondaic word in the second foot, are Plautine: but perhaps it is rash to alter them, occurring as they do in a Prologue. For Plautus's rule, see on omnibus, vs. 55 supra.

149. lanterna or laterna from λαμπτήρ, a lantern, here made of horn, infra 1. 1. 187.

152. facere histrioniam: see on 90 supra.

ACT I. 1.

Scene, before the house of Amphitruo, at Thebes. Time, night. Enter Sosia, on his way from the harbour with a message to Alcumena from Amphitruo, who has just returned from the conquest of the Teleboae. Sosia is evidently in a state of terror, and relieves his fear partly by reciting partly by singing the reflections that come into his mind on the situation. The variety of his metres reflects the alarm he feels. He reminds us of Sir Hugh Evans singing "By shallow rivers, to whose falls melodious birds sing madrigals," and immediately adding "Mercy on me, I have great dispositions to cry." He finds Mercury, who has assumed his own form, keeping guard in front of the house, and is driven away by him.

1. Qui me alter : cf. 4. 3. 12, Note.

2. Sosia dreads being assaulted by some revelling young men : secondly, being apprehended by the police as a suspicious character. hoc noctis, 'at this time of the night.' The phrase is like id temporis, id aetatis, hoc aetatis, etc.

3. tres viri, 'the police.' The tresviri or triumviri capitales were police magistrates, whose business it was to keep order in the city, especially at night : hence called tresviri nocturni. Cf. Asin. 1. 2. 5, Ibo ego ad tris viros, vostraque ibi nomina Fazo erunt : capitis te perdam et filiam. They seem to have had eight attendants to inflict punishment : infra, vs. 7.

4. promptuaria cella, 'lock-up room,' properly 'a store-room.' Apul. Apol. 54 extr. Cf. Cat. R. R. 11. 3. ad flagrum : Hor. Epod. 4. 11, sectus flagellis hic triumviralibus.

5. nec causam liceat dicere, as a slave. neque in ero quicquam habeam auxilii : because absent.

7. homines octo validi : As. 3. 2. 18, Ubi causams aepe dixeris pendens adversus octo Artutos audacis viros, valentis virgatores; Ib. 23, Ubi saepe ad languorem tua duritia dederis octo Validos lictores ulmeis adfectos lentis virgis.

8. peregre, supra Prol. 5. publicitus accipiar, 'entertained at the public expense.' It was customary, especially in Athens, to entertain ambassadors, etc., on their arrival or return from abroad at the public expense, and in the name of the State (δημοσίᾳ). Aristophanes is very severe on this custom, Ach. 127. publicitus : cf. Ter. Phorm. 5. 8. 85, Non hoc publicitus scelus hinc deportarier in solas terras. ita ... accipiar : I have ventured to scan the verse as Ionic a minore, a metre which is supposed not to occur in Plautus. That objection is answered by pointing out that the Sotadean metre occurs nowhere else in Plautus, and unquestionably 14-17 are Sotadean. The fact is that Plautus in this canticum has attempted to work in every Greek lyric metre which he was able to compose, Trochaic octonarii, Ionics a minore, Sotadeans, Anapaests, Cretics, Bacchiacs. Ionic a minore may be regarded as a variety of Bacchiac metre. An Ionic a minore is a molossus with its first syllable resolved, and a molossus often replaces a bacchius in bacchiac metre. Even in this canticum, vs. 23 is best scanned as Ionic. In Truc. 2. 5. 1 (448, Schoell), a bacchiac canticum is introduced by the line:

Puero isti date mammam, which, though capable of scansion as two bacchii, is really two Ionics a minore, and so in other passages.

11. idem hoc, 'on this same errand': ad hoc, ob hoc. The idiom is not unlike the use of ταῦτα, τοῦτο, for διὰ ταῦτα, διὰ τοῦτο. See note on 3. 2. 28 infra, Et id huc reverti. luci, or lucei, an old locative, 'by daylight': cf. mani, noctu, vesperi, temperi.

12. servitūs. I have accepted Spengel's scansion of these three verses as anapaestic dimeters. In Plautine anapaestic verse, esp. in octonarii, syllables long by position and nature were often shortened, owing to the influence of the accent. The shortening of hoc in vs. 11 has many parallels even in Iambic and Trochaic verses, following an accented monosyllable, or, which is the same thing for this purpose, a monosyllable by elision. Cf. for instance vss. 293, 310, 444, 459, 742 of Sonnenschein's Captivi. For the shortening of the last syllable of servitus in anapaestic metre, cf. the long list given by Spengel, Reform. p. 314. Among these is Curc. 1. 2. 53:

Quae tuo gutturi sit monumentum, which is sufficient to illustrate servitūs here. See on 5. 1. 10. servitus is here strictly a verbal noun and takes a dative as servio does.

14. noctesque diesque assiduo satis superquest. This is a normal Sotadean consisting of two Ionics a maiore followed by three trochees. For this metre see W. Christ, Metrik, p. 489. The only variations from the normal form which these five lines present are that in vs. 15 there is contraction of the two last syllables of the first Ionic a maiore and substitution of a ditrocheus for the second: quo facto aut | dicto adest o-; in vs. 16 there is resolution of the second syllable of both Ionics a maiore, Ipse dominus, dives operis.

This metre is very rare in Latin as in Greek. Varro occasionally employed it. From his Aborigines, a Menippean satire, are cited (1-3 Riese):

Múgit bovis, ovís balat, equi hínniúnt gallína, Pípat—

Grúndit tepídó lacte satúr molá mactátus, which have slight variations from the normal form. The metre was used in popular airs as in the words put in the mouth of the gladiator who fought with the Mirmillo who wore a metal fish in his cap :

Nón te petō, píscem petō quíd fugís me, Gálle.

But except an odd lampoon or so, I do not think we have any other Sotadeans until Martial, and he has only two, 3. 29 :

Hás cum geminá compede dēdicát caténas, Sáturñe tibi Zoilus ánnulós prióres.

16. operis, gen. of opus, not, as Ussing holds, abl. of opera. The construction is expers operis et laboris, not dives operis, 'rich in slaves.' dives is always simply 'rich' in Plautus: it is never joined with the ablative in the sense of 'rich in a thing,' as Langen has shown.

17. quodcumque homini accidit lubère, 'whatever whim comes into a man's head'; lit. whatever it befalls a man to wish. posse, impersonal, 'is possible.' potest is often so used by Plautus. It is sometimes so used by Cicero, and I have no doubt that the line of Propertius, 3. 7. 46, Pauper: at in terra nil ubi flere potest, should be so written, and rendered: 'Poor, I grant, but where on earth is it possible to find no cause of complaint?'

18. aequom esse putat: this seems to contradict the next verse, but it is possible, the point may be that when the master argues between himself and fate, he then discusses whether it is fair that all his wishes should be granted: and answers that question in the affirmative. But when it comes to ordering his slave the question as to fairness or unfairness never enters his head.

20. expetunt, 'fall out,' 'happen.' See on 1. 2. 33.

23. eum, i.e. me.

24. potivit ... servitutis, 'has put into the possession of slavery,' a peculiar idiom, but paralleled by Capt. 1. 1. 24, postquam meus rex est potitus hostium, and Epid. 4. 1. 5, ita

gnata mea hostium est potita, and ibid. 35. This idiom does not seem to be the same as that by which potior, 'to own,' is used even of bad things: mortem, Gell. 13. 1; quid mali, Ter. Phorm. 3. 1. 5; fugae potiti, As. 3. 2. 9, might be explained either way, as mortis letique potitum, Lucr. 4. 776. For the active form cf. Rud. 4. 2. 6, piscatu novo me uberi compotivit. But it has been proposed, I cannot remember where or by whom, to take potire and potiri, when used of bad things, as hostium, etc., as a sort of irony, 'has caught hold of the enemy,' meaning 'the enemy has caught hold of him.' But I doubt this view.

25. quiritat, 'is loudly complaining.' This verb, which Nonius derived from Quirites, 'to appeal to the citizens,' is said in some glossaries to denote the voice of the pig, and this derivation is accepted apparently by Varro, who includes it among verbs, ab animalium vocibus tralata in homines, L. L. 7. 81; and Arist. Carm. Philom. 55, has Quiritat verres, pardus rudat, oncat asellus. But there is no doubt that the Romans themselves commonly connected it with Quirites and used it in the sense of 'protesting,' 'complaining.' Our 'cry' is derived from it through Italian gridare, French crier. It is found in Lucilius, 200 (L), where it is joined with rudet and ciulitabit, and who makes the first syllable short; in Livy, in Asinius Pollio ap. Cic., and several times in Apuleius. In Liv. 39. 8, nulla vox quiritantium inter stupra et caedes exaudiri poterat, it is used of people screaming in agonising pain or alarm, and so by Pollio ap. Cic. Fam. 10. 32, ille misero quiritanti civis Romanus sum. But in Apuleius, 8. 156, 5. 107, it is not distinguishable in sense from queror, and in mss. it is often misspelt querito, whence the corruption queritur here.

26. vero, 'of a truth.' verna, 'a born slave'; the word, as we gather from Nonius's note on the previous verse, implied reproach. See Crit. Note.

numero, 'too soon.' The meaning is this. Sosia, on his arrival at the harbour, had returned thanks, or had thought of returning thanks, to the gods for his safe return. He says he was too hasty about it, having this perilous errand still before him. Cf. Afranius 312, Me miseram! numero ac nequiquam egi gratias, whence it would seem the phrase numero agere gratias was a common one, equivalent to holloaing before one is out of the wood. The following are the passages where numero is found in Plautus: Cas. 3. 5. 21, numero dicis; Men. 2. 2. 13, numero huc advenis ad prandium; Mil. 5. 7, Perii. Haud etiam, numero hoc dicis; Poen. 5. 4. 101, o Apella, o Zeuxis pictor, cur numero estis mortui? Merc. 4. 3. 37, numero purgitas. Seven instances are given of this numero in Ribbeck's Index to Lat. Comic Frag. in mentem fuit. This archaic use of the accusative with in is found in Bacch. 1. 2. 53, Ecquid in mentemst tibi Patrem tibi esse. Cic. uses in potestatem, in dicionem esse; and Prop. 3. 9. 60 has et a te est, Quod ferar in partes ipse fuisse tuas. So Mr. Purser defends in provinciam cum imperio fuerunt, Cic. Ad Fam. 8. 8. 8, Hermathena, vol. 6, p. 302 seqq. Sallust has several instances of this idiom.

28. merito meo, abl. 'according to my deserts.' See note on 2. 1. 22, infra. referre gratiam and habere gratiam: but agere gratias. This is the general rule. see Langen, p. 11. According to him habere gratiam is found in Plautus twenty-four times: referre gratiam, seventeen times, agere gratias, nine times. The exceptions to these rules are chiefly found in mixed expressions, or are corrupt.

29. allēgent, 'commission.' occillo, the reading of the MSS., might well mean 'to harrow,' a diminutive from occo, like conscribillo from conscribo: and although suggillet, 'beat black and blue,' is plausible, alliteration is in favour of occillet. probe: see Note on adpotum probe 1. 1. 128.

30. ingrata, passive, 'shown no thanks for,' cf. Note on Prol. 48. fecerant: cf. præfecerat, vs. 57 infra. The only perfects in -erunt, whose penultimate is shortened by Plautus, are meruerunt, Most. 1. 3. 124; subegerunt, Bacch. 4. 9. 4; locaverunt, Pers. 1. 3. 80; dormierunt, Poen. Prol. 21. Other instances cited by Brix on Mil. 1. 1. 61 are not true instances. The only really strong passage in favour of such a scansion is postquam aediles emerunt, ending a trimeter, Ter. Eun. Prol. 21, but emerant may be right there in spite of the strong testimony for emerunt. inrita, 'nullified,' 'made of no effect,' by getting into this dangerous escapade.

32. opinatus fui. Madvig, Opusc. 2. p. 224, excepts Plautus and his contemporaries from his law that sum is never in good Latin the same as fui with the passive participle. In ordinary Latin opinatus fui would mean 'I was for a time of opinion': but here it simply i.q. opinatus sum. See Note on Hor. Sat. 1. 6. 13, pulsus fugit (not fuit), and Sat. 2. 8. 6, aper captus. Madvig cites from Plautus, Poen. 1347, sciri et miratus fui; Mil. 118, Capiunt praedones navem illam ubi vectus fui, to which Ussing adds Mil. 102, Is publice legatus Naupactum fuit; Most. 4. 3. 2, in Aegyptum hinc modo vectus fui; Pseud. 2. 3. 23, quod subito commentus fui.

35. duello, here three syllables, and perduelles 2. 2. 10, are the only passages in Plautus where this word is uncontracted. internecatis: the preposition denotes utterness. Many of these Iambic octonarii are really to be scanned as asynartete dimeters. Hence the hiatus at maxumo, poplo, etc., and the short syllables ut, advenimus, etc. The same is found to occur in septenarian Iambics, the merry laughing metre, which does not occur in this play, of which the Asinaria furnishes hundreds of lines. When so scanned the fourth foot must, of course, be a pure Iambus.

36. acerba, 'untimely,' of youths cut off in their prime. Virg. Aen. 6. 428: Quos dulcis vitae exsortes et ab ubere raptos Abstulit atra dies, et funere mersit acerbo.

38. imperio atque auspicio. Cf. Horace's Teucri duce et auspice Teucri. I should much prefer maxumi, 'my most mighty lord, Amphitruo.' I cannot see the force of maxume. It would mean 'for the most part': then under whose auspices and leadership for the other part? For maxumi cf. maximus Hector, Aen. 5. 371; maximus Aeneas, Aen. 5. 330.

39. praedad, agrod, adoriad may have been, as suggested, an old formula, 'with booty, land, and corn.' See Crit. Note. adorea, properly 'a distribution of corn after victory.' Hor. Carm. 4. 4. 41: Qui primus alma risit adorea. Pliny, H.N. 18. 81, says: gloriam ipsam a farris honore adoream appellabant. adficere is used both of good and evil in Plautus: 'to treat.'

40. Creoni: so Charon makes either Charonis or Charontis in Latin.

41. praemisit ut nuntiem. This sequence of a present subjunctive after a perfect in the principal clause is quite Plautine, when the purpose is still not fulfilled, and that even in cases where it is difficult without forcing to regard the perfect as other than aoristic. See note on l. 2. 26.

42. ut gesserit rempublicam. 'how he served his country.' See note on l. 3. 26.

43. meditabor, rehearse (μελετᾶν, προμελετᾶν). illo = illoc, illuc thither.

45. quom pugnabant maxume, 'when they were in the thick of fight I was in the thick of flight!' quom ... maxime is 'at the very moment when,' a sense it often bears in the best ages. But the second maxime is not apparently used in this sense, but simply means, 'as hard as I could,' with a joke on the other idiom. Cf. l. 1. 273. Sosia's light way of speaking of his own want of heart for fighting recalls the American parody: "Farewell, mother, you will never see my name among the slain." ego: even if we do not add tum, this passage does not prove egō; but tum is no doubt right.

50. delēgit, pres., as its position shows. In Iambic septenarii, and Iambic octonarii, whenever the fourth foot ends with the end of a word, the fourth foot is invariably an Iambus.

55. dare, for daturus esse (or daturum, as probably se is the subject, not Argiros), a common Plautine idiom. Cf. Asin. 2. 4. 36, aibat reddere; Merc. 2. 3. 84, dixit se redhibere. Ter. Phorm. 3. 2. 47, miles dare se dixit. aliter animati, exactly our 'otherwise minded.'

56. igitur, 'thereupon'; igitur generally has a temporal rather than an illative sense in Plautus. Igitur tum, igitur demum are common in Plautus. expugnassere: the archaic future infinitive = expugnaturum esse. So reconciliassere, Capt. 1. 2. 65; impetrassere, Aul. 4. 7. 6; Mil. 4. 2. 138. If we suppose the futurum exactum to have been originally expugnarisso, its contraction into expugnasso is easy. Brix, Capt. 1. 2. 65.

60. proinde uti, accordingly they bid him (iubent) uti, etc.

63. Teleboae contra: the mss. have contra Teleboae: as I have taken the view that contra is more likely to be a trochee than a spondee, I have accepted the transposition: though I have doubts whether I am justified in so doing. See Preface, contra.

65. A learned editor makes a slip here by saying of exitumst: molossus pro cretico; of course the middle syllable is short, following the supine. Cf. Pers. 3. 3. fin., dum stas reditum oportuit. Equally, of course, the pres. pass. is exītur.

69. medii = in medium. Langen defending the conjecture uterque imperator in medium exeunt, shows indeed that uterque regularly takes a plural verb in Plautus, quoting Trin. 642, celerī gradu eunt uterque, etc., but he has not produced any passage where uterque, taking a plural verb, is at the same time joined to a singular noun.

78. edit: of performing exploits. Virg. Aen. 10. 602, Talia per campos edebat funera. So strages ediderit, 9. 785.

80. cadunt pulveris ui et uirum. I read pulveris for vulueris. It is quite impossible that vulueris can be sound. Vulnus could not be used collectively for vulnera. Secondly, et shows that another cause beside anything caused by men is mentioned; et virum: and wounds, being the work of men, are not a distinct cause from men. Now we know that dust was a very important cause contributing to defeat in ancient battles. At the battle of Cannae, fought probably only a few years before this play was acted, Livy tells us, 22. 46, ventus (Vulturum incolae regionis vocant) multo pulvere in ipsa ora volvendo prospectum ademit; a cause of the defeat greatly exaggerated by Silius, 9. 504, tum mole ruinae Sternuntur tellure et miles et arma tubaeque; a cause referred to by Juvenal, 11. 198, Cannarum in pulvere victis. Plautus would not be unwilling to remind his countrymen that it was not only owing to want of valour that battles are lost. I need not add that pulveris comes in very naturally after nebula. Cf. Macaulay, Battle of the Lake Regillus, "And like the Pomptine fog at morn the dust hung over head." cadunt, 'they fall,' i.e. 'the combatants fall,' not only the enemy. The overthrow of the enemy begins in the next verse.

84. convortitur pro convortit, Nonius, p. 480. Doubtful though this seems, yet emendation of the line is so uncertain, that I have left the passage as in the mss. Mueller, in his edition of Nonius, speaks well of Ussing's conjecture, sic tamen, but does not change the text, though he obelizes it. fugam in: Ussing shows that the anastrophe of prepositions, even monosyllabic, is frequent in Plautus, quoting quo ab, qui pro, quo ex, qua in, quam per, quem ad, etc. These however are all with relatives: no certain case with nouns is given by Ussing, save one with erga, which is not in point.

85. statim, 'standing his ground,' 'firmly,' ἐν σταδῇ ὑσμίνῃ. Cf. Ennius, Ajax (17 Ribb.): Qui rem cum Achivis gesserunt statim. Nonius states that the first syllable is long in this sense, but the passages in which it occurs in Plautus do not prove it. It is only certainly used by Plautus here and in vs. 120 infra, in the same sense as here.

87. quisque ut steterat iacet optinetque ordinem. This description rises a good deal higher than the Comic slave; it is quite Homeric. A friend quotes Byron, Siege of Corinth, "Even as they fell in files they lay."

89. inducere: the subject is the officer commanding the horse: 'Amphitruo commands to lead the cavalry to the charge.'

91. For cum in hiatus in this position in a Cretic tetrameter, cf. Most. 4. 1. 25:

hóc die crástini quóm erus resciverit:

and compare Sonnenschein's Preface, p. xxviii.

92. foedant, 'rout.' According to Servius on Aen. 3. 241, foedare is cruentare. He quotes Ennius (Fab. 439, Mueller), ferro foedati iacent. Cf. Aen. 2. 55.

94. etiam ... adhuc, 'so far.' Either word would bear that meaning, and as Ussing remarks this is an instance of Plautina abundantia like quoque etiam. perperam: falsely.

95. Mercury and Jupiter were present, as being divine, at the battle.

96. Perduelles: three syllables, see supra, vs. 35; 'the enemy': an old usage, hence perduellio, 'high-treason.' penetrant se in fugam, 'take to flight.' penetrare always takes an accusative in Plautus, Trin. 2. 2. 33: Ne penetrarem me usquam ubi esset damni conciliabulum. Men. 2. 3. 49: neque huc Umquam postquam natus sum intra portam penetravi pedem. So Men. 5. 2. 64. Trin. 2. 2. 13: quin prius me ad plures penetravi? even of coming out of a house: Trin. 2. 2. 1: Quo illic homo foras se penetravit ex aedibus? In Lucret. 2. 406 Lachmann was probably right in reading penetrareque sese, 'make their way in,' for p. saxa. The use of sperno is sometimes similar to this: Capt. 3. 3. 2, opes auxiliaque a me segregant spernuntque se, 'make themselves scarce.' Cf. Mil. 4. 6. 17 with Tyrrell's note.

98. Pterelam from Πτερέλας, a contracted form of Πτερέλαος.

103. velatis manibus: cf. Virg. Aen. 7. 154, centum oratores ... ire iubet, ramis velatos Palladis omnes. 11. 101, velata ramis oleae veniamque rogantes. Soph. O. R. 3, ικτηρίοις κλάδοισιν ἐξεστεμμένοι. The hands are covered by the leaves of the olive, and the fillets of wool. ignoscamus peccatum suum: ignoscere sometimes took an accusative of the offence, even without a dative of the offender, Ter. Heaut. 4. 1. 34; Virg. Cul. 293.

104. dedunt ... poplo. The language is probably caught from some of the old annalists on whom Fabius Pictor and Cincius Alimentus founded their histories. Ussing quotes the remarkably close parallel, Liv. 1. 38. 2, Deditisne vos populumque Collatinum, urbem, agros, aquam, terminos, delubra, utensilia, divina humanaque omnia in meam populique Romani dicionem? The Roman colouring Plautus throws over his Greek plots is remarkable.

105. in arbitratum, 'into the disposal,' 'to the discretion.' arbitratu (alicuius) is a common phrase, especially in the phrase tuo arbitratu, 'as much as you please.' Tabulabis meo arbitratu, 'you shall be flogged as I choose,' Trin. 4. 2. 148. Horace substitutes the less common arbitrio for the sake of his metre, Sat. 2. 3. 86. epulum arbitrio Arri, 'a feast of Arrius's ordering.' You might render Shakespeare's "at your choice, sir," and "to the top of my bent," by tuo arbitratu, meo arbitratu.

107. qui, abl., sc. patera. It is of all genders, and used even with a plural antecedent. Ussing quotes Rud. 4. 4. 66: Ibi sunt signa, qui parentes noscere haec posset suos, and Cas. 3. 6. 21: gladios ... qui me atque te interimat. In such cases qui has almost lost its declension and become a conjunction, a process which is more complete in quo.

109. attat, 'ha!' 'hoho!' an exclamation of surprise: attatae is perhaps a little stronger. It is the Greek ἐα. The last syllable is long: Aul. 4. 8. 12: Attát, eccum ipsum; ibo ut hoc condam domum; Ter. And. 1. 1. 125: Percussit ilico animum: attat, hoc illud est. ilico, see Crit. Note. illic, the old dative of ille, does not seem to me so probable, so soon after illic, nom.

110. hocedie. The very large number of instances of hiatus that may be cured by writing hocedie for hodie, joined to the express testimony of Marius Victorinus quoted in the Critical Note, form sufficient justification for the introduction of this form into the text. In this play alone at least four instances of hiatus are thus corrected. See index s.v. hocedie.

111. eludere: 'baffle,' 'delude,' 'make sport of.' So Pers. 5. 2. 24: quin elude, ut voles. Ter. Eun. 1. 1. 10; Phorm. 5. 7. 2. Langen however only allows to eludere in Plautus the sense of 'winning a thing at play': anulum quem parasitus hic te elusit, Curc. 5. 2. 31. In the sense of 'fooling' he says Plautus only used ludere, deludere, ludos facere or ludificare (i), and alters eludere to ludere or deludere when this sense is required.

112. med for me is a much safer correction than to write huiusce with Ussing, a form which Plautus seems to have avoided: see note on Prolog. 96, supra.

114. malum, 'roguish'; malitia, 'roguishness,' has in Plautus obtained a sense in which 'cunning,' 'cleverness,' is a more prominent idea than wickedness: cf. Pers. 1. 3. 73; Ter tanto peior ipsa est, quam illam tu esse vis.

115. telo suo sibi: sibi in such cases intensifies suo: it is generally used as a "dativus incommodi," when something is done to the detriment of a person by his own instruments. So Ter. Ad. 5. 8. 35, suo sibi gladio hunc iugulo: Truc. 3. 2. 30, male accipiar mea mihi pecunia: but that this sense of detriment is not in the words themselves is shown by such phrases as suo sibi gnato, As. 4. 2. 16, simply 'his very own son'; Mil. 3. 1. 38: Inest in hoc amussincta sua sibi ingenua indoles, 'this man has a gentlemanly nature peculiarly his own.'

117. quod certo sciam, 'which I am sure of.' Certo scire is 'I know for a certainty'; certe scio, 'I certainly know' (it is certainly true that I know). Certo is only used by the comic poets and Cicero, chiefly in his letters. Certe belongs to all periods and all kinds of composition. (Tyrrell, Miles, 2. 3. 2). certo is only used with scire; certe with any verb (Reid on Cic. Sen. 2).

118. hac noctu, 'to-night,' also often 'last night.' There is no other trace of the old declension from which noctu seems to be derived. The line Hac noctu filo pendebit Etruria tota is cited by Macrobius l. 4. 18 from Ennius. On the other hand nox was used as an adv. meaning 'at night' or 'all night': As. 3. 3. 7, nox, si voles, manebo. Nocturnum: this is the only classical passage where this proper name, 'the god of the night,' occurs. It is found in Inscriptions, see Crit. Note.

119. Septentriones, 'The Seven Stars.' I think septentrio meant merely 'the seven'; that -trio is only a termination; and that the ancients were mistaken in supposing triones was a noun meaning 'ploughers,' derived by Varro, L. L. 7. 74, from terra, or tero, or trigon; by modern philologists,* from tero. Tero does not mean 'to plough,' and triones could not be formed from it. The six sides of a die were called unio, linio, trio, quatrio, quinquio, senio, Isid. Or. 18. 65. Septentrio was formed on a false analogy with trio and quatrio. The seven stars in the head and back of the Great Bear are meant. Owing to the plural form, which grew up naturally owing to the proximity of septem, and the incorrect meaning attached, triones became separated from septem, and the name came to be incorrectly extended to both Bears. See Cicero Nat. Deor. 2. 41. 105, Helice, cuius clarissimas stellas totis noctibus cernimus, Quas nostri septem soliti vocitare triones; Virg. Aen. 1. 744, geminosque triones. The derivation now proposed explains, and is the only possible explanation of, the fact that the form septentrio, 'the septet,' was in use as well as septentriones; for though septentriones may naturally have grown out of septentrio, it is impossible that septentrio could have arisen out of septem triones.

quoquam, 'in any direction,' occurs two or three times in Plautus, Capt. 2. 3. 96.

120. atque is used as if he had said, 'the moon remains in the same position as (atque) at her first rising.' atque makes a comparison, cf. Miles, 3. 1. 169, haud centensumam Partem dixi

* Max Mueller, Lect. 2. 400, derives trio from strio, which he supposes to have been an old word meaning a star, connected with the root of stella.

atque otium rei si sit possum expromere : Mil. 4. 2. 140 (1130), Numquid videtur demutare atque ut quidem Dixi esse vobis dudum hunc moechum militem, on which passages see Tyrrell's notes. Its use after alius, aliter and comparatives is quite common.

121. Iugulae, the old Latin name for the constellation called 'Orion's belt.' It is probably a diminutive from iugum, 'a yoke.' Varro, who quotes this vs., L.L. 7. 50, and Festus give iugula as the name of the constellation. Manilius, 5. 174. 5, gives the plural form, but he seems to understand a different constellation :—

Nunc Cancro vicina canam, cui parte sinistrae Consurgunt Iugulae.

These, according to Schneider, are the Aselli.

Vesperugo, the old name for Vesper, Hesperus, 'the evening star,' Varro, L.L. 7. 50.

Vergiliae, the Roman name for the Pleiads, Prop. 1. 8. 10 ;

Et sit iners tardis navita Vergiliis.

The word is probably derived from virga, and means a bunch of switches (poignée de verges), which the constellation resembles in shape.

The hiatus after Vergiliae is probably Plautine, though rare. The following more or less resemble it : Curc. 2. 3. 79 :

Talos accipio invocam alman meam nutricem Herculem.

Merc. 5. 2. 11 :

Égomet mihi comés, calator, équos, agaso, armiger.

122. statim, 'standing still' : see on vs. 85, supra. quoquam, supra 119. die, dative ; so jide, 237 infra.

124. datam pulcre locas, 'you make a good investment of your services so given.' Locare is regularly used of investing money, as 'to place' is sometimes with us. Most. 3. 1. 4, Locare argenti nemi nummum quo. Cf. Most. 1. 3. 144. Also of investing a kindness : Livy 7. 20, locare beneficium apud gratos. Ennius 389 (Ribb.), Benefacta male locata male facta arbitrator. Plautus uses locare also of a father betrothing his daughter, Aul. 2. 2. 15, as well as in its common sense of giving a contract for a thing to be done, Pers. 1. 3. 80. Ponere is perhaps more common in classical Latin if in the sense of 'investing.'

125. neque : this may reply to neque in 122, but perhaps neque is here simply archaic for non. In the phrase nec recte dicere, it stands for non : so in nequo, necopinatus, and neque eo, which according to Festus is the same as noneo. So necuter, res nec mancipi, negotium, etc., preserve this old usage. Neque certainly is used often by Plautus, not as a disjunctive, but as simply making a negative statement which agrees with the train of thought of the speaker. See note on 4. 3. 2.

126. nisi item unam : Spengel, Plautus, p. 204, defended this hiatus, which he allowed after dissyllables which together form a resolved arsis. But it is not accepted by recent critics. The introduction of si is very easy here : and the other passages in the Amphitruo which seem to defend this hiatus are as easily emended :

2. 2. 43. máge nunc méum officium facere si huic eam advorsum árbitor.

2. 1. 77. nón soleo ego somniculose éri imperia persequi.

5. 1. 34. Amphitruo piam et pudicam tuam esse uxorem út scias.

5. 1. 54. Nón metuo quin méae uxori látae suppetiáe sier.t.

1. 1. 98. Ipsúsque Amphitruo régem Pterelam súa obtruncavit manu.

These are all to be corrected : see the notes on these passages. perpetem : the archaic form for perpetuam which Plautus once joins to noctem, Rul. 2. 3. 40, for the sake of his metre :

Iactatae exemplis plurimis miserae perpetuam noctem.

He often uses other parts of perpetuus, but no other case of perpes save the accusative. In post-classic writers we find a nom. perpes and ablative perpeti or perpete. pependi : slaves were hung up by the hands to be flogged, As. 3. 2. 18 : or for mere torture, with a weight attached to the feet, Ibid. 2. 2. 37.

128. atque, intensive, by itself = καὶ ταῦτα, 'yes and properly drunk.' Atque adeo is stronger. probe is used in such phrases exactly as our 'properly.' Cf. Rul. 2. 7. 8, si probe adpotus siem. Cf. occillet probe, vs. 29 supra.

129. mira sunt, 'it's a wonder.' Both mira sunt and mirum est are of frequent occurrence in Plautus. Cf. Capt.

4. 2. 25. Ussing, for the plural, quotes nota tibi, Virg. Aen 1. 669, and refers to Madvig, Greek Syntax, 1. b. not. 4. See note on mirum quin, 2. 2. 118.

invitavit sese, 'has given himself a rouse.' Invitare, 'to invite to an entertainment,' acquired the further meaning of 'to entertain,' and this sense it usually bears in Plautus. Cf. Rud. 2. 3. 32 :

periit potando opinor :
Neptunus magnis poculis hac nocte eum invitarit.

Ibid 3. 5. 30 :

Si hercle illic illas hodie digito tetigerit Invitas, ni istunc istis invitassitis, etc.,

where there is a play on invitas, 'against their will.' In Cic. Phil. 12. 9, Verr. 3. 5. 11, invitare hospitio, invitare tecto ac domo, the ordinary meaning seems to be running into this sense of entertaining. Cf. also Turpilius. 202 (Ribb.), quibus rebus vita amantum invitari solet ; Id. 71, vinon invitat plusculum sese ; Id. 132, invitarit ... plusculum hic se in prandio.

130. Ain, here a spondee ; so 1. 1. 190. It is more often a monosyllable : 2. 2. 167 ; 5. 1. 37.

132. accipiam, ironical : 'I'll give you a reception.' Cp. Virg. Aen. 10. multa morte recepit, 'entertained him to a full meal of death.'

133. Vbi sunt, 'what has become of?' It is half a challenge, half an invitation. Cf. Most. 2. 1. 9, Ubi sunt isti plagipatulae ferritribaces viri? Merc. 1. 2. 19, Ubi sunt amatores mariti?

134. scita, 'capital,' 'fine'; a favourite adjective of Plautus, 1. 3. S infra. conducto male, 'hired at a high price'; bene emere is 'to buy cheap,' male emere 'to buy dear.' Cf. Ter. Eun. 4. 4. 2, prodi, male conciliate, 'come out, you dear bargain.' Pseud. 1. 2. 1, male habiti, male conciliati, 'kept at a loss, bought at a loss.' Ov. Am. 1. 10. 44. Pro male conducto gratia nulla toro. The French bon marché keeps the idea of bene emere.

135. pro huius verbis, 'in a manner suitable to this fellow's words'; pro is here used as in such phrases as pro tua virtute, etc., 'in keeping with your virtue.'

139. meticulosus: so somniculosus, febriculosus, pidiculosus. The word occurs again, Most. 5. 1. 52, Nescis quam meticulosa res sit ire ad iudicem. aeque: this word, when joined to an adjective, takes an ablative after it in Plautus, just as much as the comparative degree does. Curc. 1. 2. 52, Qui me aeque fortunatus erit? So adaeque, Casin. 3. 5. 45, Neque est neque frui me senex quisquam amator adaeque miser; Most. 1. 1. 29, Quo nemo adaeque iuventute ex omni Attica Antehac est habitus parvus. To these instances Ussing has added Pliny H.N. 35. 17, picturae ... quibus equidem nullas aeque demior. It may be thought that the phrase speculo claras, Most. 3. 1. 112, means 'as bright as a mirror,' aeque being implied. Langen, p. 18-22, classifies the usages of aeque in Plautus.

140. denuo — detexere, 'to weave over again,' i.e. to cudgel me; for in weaving, the threads of the warp were struck down with the shuttle. detexere is often used in the sense of "to weave a web to its finish," i.q., pertexere. Cf. Pseud. 2. 4. 7:—

Neque exordiri primum, unde occipias, habes Neque ad detexundam telam certos terminos.

Cf. also Incert. ap. Rhet. ad Herenn. 3. 26. 42, Nunc ego te ab summo iam detexam exordio. This is Ussing's explanation. It is difficult to see how the other explanation, 'to steal,' can be got out of detexere; the idea, however, is that when a web is finished it is taken off the loom, so a coat stripped from a person's back may be said detexi, and with this idea Leo reads de umero for denuo of the mss. I have unintentionally printed Leo's reading de umero in the text. I pray the reader to substitute denuo for it.

141. pruriunt, 'itch,' in expectation of a blow. Cf. Mil. 2. 4. 54, mihi dorsus totus prurit; so Poen. 5. 5. 36, Pers. 1. 1. 32.

142. hospitio pugneo, 'a fisty welcome.' Cf. Rud. 3. 4. 58, Iam hercle tibi messes in ore fiet mergis pugneis, 'I'll make hay in your face with fisty rakes,' reminding us of the shrew's 'I'll comb your noddle with a three-legged stool.' For the form cf. stimuleus, ulmeus.

144. dormiam, as dead, or stunned; κοιμᾶσθαι (whence cemetery) often meant 'to die' in late Greek; and sopitus is the usual word for 'stunned' in Livy.

145. oppido, 'utterly,' 'quite' = (κομιδῇ), rather a favourite adverb with Plautus, used both with verbs and nouns. It is supposed to = plane: oppidum being said to be connected with ob-pedum (πέδον), but it is very doubtful.

146. hic. The nom. masc. is generally short in Plautus, and Luchs has written a tract to prove that it is always so. Four or five passages at least rebel, and it is very difficult to emend the passage before us to suit hic. For ut hic and sic do not suit auscultet; auscultare means 'to listen,' not 'to hear' (cf. Varro L. L. 6. 83, who quotes from an old poet, audio haud ausculto), and hic auscultet means 'let him listen,' equivalent to hoc auscultante. The other passages where hic is long are—

Capt. 3. 4. 15 :

Hégio hic homó rabiosus hábitus est in Álide, where Luchs would either suppose hiatus after Hégio (and we find similar hiatus after Amphitrúo in this play, see Index), or else read istic for hic.

Capt. 1. 1. 30 :

Nunc hic ocepit quáestum hunc fili grátia, where, as Seyffert points out, hic cannot be the adverb.

Cure. 5. 3. 38 :

Líbera haec est, híc huius frater ést haec autem huius ést soror.

Pers. 5. 2. 50 :

Táce stulte: hic eius géminust frater. Hícinest? Ac geminíssimus.

These last two instances might be got over without changing the mss. if we allowed huius and eius to be pyrrhics, but the evidence in favour of this in Plautus is very weak. There is no certain instance of hic in the Fragments of the Latin Scenic Poets, nor in Ennius; but there are two instances of hic in the Fragments of Lucilius, and none of hic.

147. modum in maiorem. The phrase in maiorem modum, or maiorem in modum, is frequent in Cicero, especially in the phrase maiozem in modum commendare. For magis added to a comparative Ussing quotes Aul. 3. 2. 10, mollior magis; Capt. 3. 4. 111, magis certius; Merc. Prol. 55, magis maiores; Men. 5. 6. 13, magis multo facilius; Merc. 5. 2. 57, magis melius; Poen. Prol. 82, magis maiores; Ib. 1. 2. 3, magis plus; Ib. 2. 15, mage contentiores; Stich. 5. 4. 22, magis dulcius. See Note on 5. 1. 8 infra.

150. duro sopori, 'hard sleep,' i.e. the sleep of death, so called, probably, with reference to the rigidity of the body in the sleep of death, as well as to the discomfort of a hard bed, cf. Virg. Aen. 10. 745:

Olli dura quies oculos et ferreus urget Sonnus.

And so Aen. 12. 309. In Prop. 1. 18. 28 we have the literal sense, Et datur inculto tramite dura quies; and in Prop. 1. 16. 22, Durus may mediate between the contending readings in the line Turpis et in tepido limine somnus erit (al. tristis). See the commentators on the passages in Virgil, and compare χάλκεος ὕπνος, Hom. Il. 11. 241.

153. sic volo: 'that's as I would have it, says Mercury, probably tightening his girdle for a fight. There can be little doubt that sic volo is the true reading. Cf. Ter. Ad. 2. 1. 15, em, sic volo (Aeschinus preparing his man to beat Sannio). The mss. rather point to sic colo, which Weise explains to mean, 'that's my way!' 'that's the sort of man I am'; and Poen. Prol. 13, Exerce rocem, quam per virisque et colis, is quoted in its favour; but chuis, Scaliger's conjecture, is probably right there.

154. Cingitur, 'girding himself,' that is girding up his dress, not, of course, putting on the cestus.

non feret quin vapulet, 'he shall not carry it off without a beating,' Cf. Ter. Heaut. 5. 1. 45, at ne illud haud inultum si viro ferent; Ad. 3. 4. 8, haud sic auferent; Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul. Act 3. Sc. 1, 'a la stoccata carries it away.'

155. Quis homo is, like τίς ἀνὴρ in Greek, a very common phrase in Latin comedy. Ter. Ad. 5. 5. 2; And. 2. 2. 7; 4. 1. 39.

159. tractim tangam, ut dormiat? 'stroke him down gently so that he may sleep'; tractim denotes a long slow stroke.

Tractim is used (Lucr. 3. 530) of the gradual creeping of death over the body: post inde per artus Ire alios tractim gelidi vestigia leti; of the long drawn out buzzing of bees, Virg. Georg. 4. 260, tractimque susurrant. An adverb of the same form is ductim, Cure. 1. 2. 13, 'in one draught.'

Mercury's deliberation here irresistibly recalls that of Ulysses when about to strike Irus, Od. 18. 90. He meditated whether to strike him hard or gently, and decides on striking him gently, with the result that he smashes in the skull, bones, and teeth of Irus, who is carried off senseless:

Δὴ τότε μερμήριξε πολὺτλας δῖος Ὀδυσσεὺς ἢ ἐλάσει' ὥς μιν ψυχὴ λίποι αὖθι πεσόντα, ἢέ μιν ἦκ' ἐλάσειε τανύσσειέν τ' ἐπὶ γαίῃ.
Ὡδὲ δέ οἱ φρονέοντι δοάσσατο κέρδιον εἶναι, ἦκ' ἐλάσαι, ἵνα μὴ μιν ἐπιφρασσαίαιτ' Ἀχαιοί.
Δὴ τότ' ἀνασχομένω ὁ μὲν ἤλασε δεξιὸν ὦμον Ἴρος, ὃ δ' αἰχέν' ἐλασσεν ὑπ' οὐατος, ὅστέα δ' εἴσω ἔθλασεν· αὐτίκα δ' ἦλθε κατὰ στόμα φοίνιον αἶμα, κὰδ' δ' ἔπεσ' ἐν κονίῃσι μακῶν, σὺν δ' ἦλασ' ὀδόντας λακτίζων ποσὶ γαῖαν· ἀτὰρ μνηστῆρες ἀγανοὶ χεῖρας ἀνασχόμενοι γέλω' ἔκθανον·

161. nequiter, 'weakly.' Cf. Asin. 3. 3. 88, Numquam hercle facerem genua nī tam nequiter fricares, 'if you had not rubbed my knees so feebly.' male discit manus, 'it is wrong of my fist to be practising to strike his jaw feebly.' discit, if sound, must mean 'is now training, for the first time, to strike feebly.' The implication is that severe blows were habitual to his fist. This is meant to increase Sosia's fear. There does not seem to be any sufficient reason to alter the reading, though discis, making manus vocative, the conjecture of Dousa, would be an improvement.

162. alia forma ... legeris, 'the man' (or, if we read os, 'the face of the man') 'whom you graze, my fist, must quite change his (or its) shape.' The meaning is that there is no use of Mercury's hand practising to strike feebly (nequiter), for the very slightest touch is sure to alter the whole shape of the recipient. legeris: 'graze': legere meant apparently, to touch lightly. Cf. Virg. Aen. 2. 208: pontum legit, 'skims the sea.' The meaning I formerly gave to this line, 'whom you pick out to box with' (cf. lecta est operi tuo, Ov. Her. 8. 52). is scarcely likely.

163. interpolabit, 'will patch me up.' This word originally probably meant to fill defects in plaster, in statuary, or in painting, by subsequent additions. This agrees with meumque os finget denuo here. It also agrees with Most. 1. 3. 105, where the question Nova pictura interpolare vis opus lepidissimum is addressed to Philematium, who had asked for rouge (purpurissa), and with Plautus's use of the adj. interpoles of elderly ladies who try to improve their charms by means of cosmetics, Most. 1. 3. 117, istaec veteres, quae se unguentis unctitant interpoles Vetulae edentulae quae vitia corporis fuco occulunt. So Pliny uses it of plaster, 35. 16. 56: tectoriorum albaria interpolare. Nonius, however, says it is derived from the cleaning of old clothes, p. 34, s. v. ab arte fullonica, qui poliendo diligenter vetera quaeque quasi in novam speciem mutant. In this sense Cic. uses interpolare, Q. Fr. 2. 12. He also uses it of tampering with records, Verr. 2. 1. 41. The transition to the meaning of 'spoiling by adding' is easy, but the literary sense of interpolating passages in an author does not seem to be classical. finget: the metaphor is from the plastic art.

165. exossare: the taking of the back-bone out of the eel is often referred to. Ter. Ad. 3. 3. 23, Congrum istum in aqua sinito ludere: ubi ego venero exossabitur. Plaut. Pseud. 1. 3. 148, Exossabo ego illum similiter itidem ut muraenam coquos. The correction exdorsuare gets rid of the hiatus, and it is in its favour that at Aul. 2. 9. 2, where the true reading, Congrum muraenam exdorsua quantum potest, is preserved in Nonius, the mss. give exossata fac sient, but the objection that the play on os is thus lost is fatal to the proposed change.

166. ultro istunc, 'away with the man.' Capt. 3. 4. 19, Ultro istunc a me; Most. 3. 1. 78; Cas. 2. 8. 23.

167. Olet homo quidam, 'I smell somebody.' Cf. Mil. 4. 6. 43; Aristoph. Pax 180, πόθεν βροτοῦ με προσέβαλε [scil. ὀσμῇ]. malo suo, abl. of accompanying circumstances: 'to his hurt.' cum may be omitted when the noun, malo here, has an epithet. See 212 infra, and 2. 2. 161, note.

168. longe hinc afuit, 'he was far from here,' viz. in the war with his master, Amphitruo. Why Mercury should be made to utter this remark I do not see: there is no double meaning possible : it is no part of Mercury's business to reveal his divinity to Sosia : perhaps it is intended merely to increase Sosia's mystification ; it naturally calls forth Sosia's remark.

169. Illic homo superstitiosus, 'this fellow is a wizard' : this is the only meaning superstitiosus has in Plautus, who uses the word three times : Curc. 3. 27, Superstitiosus hic quidemst: vera prædicat ; Rud. 4. 4. 95, Quid si ista aut superstitiosa aut ariolast atque omnia Quidquid insit vera dicet ? It is likely that superstitiosus meant a person who believed in ghosts, a person who was conversant with ghosts, a person who could raise a ghost, a necromancer, diviner. So Mayor on Cic. N. D. 2. 72. The word was common in Roman tragedy and comedy, as a glance at Ribbeck's index will show.

gestiunt, 'are rampant.' We are informed by Donatus and Servius that gestire is properly applied to the brutes. This would suit the next line.

170. Si ... domes, 'If you are going to exercise them on me, I hope you'll first break them in on the wall.' me is accusative. See Postgate's Note on Prop. 1. 1. 33, In me nostra Venus noctes exercet amaras.

171. ne, 'verily.' Only used with pronouns, expressed or understood, especially in this phrase, Ne ego homo infelix or miser.

172. gestito, φορῶ, 'I bear,' 'I have.'

173. 'Yonder fellow wants to get a thrashing for his beast from me.' In the metaphor of slang Sosia's back is his beast.

175. e navi, 'after my voyage.' e is like ἐκ : cf. Soph. Phil. 271, ἐκ πολλοῦ σάλου. ut vectus huc sum, i.e. 'having sailed hither' ; lit., 'in accordance with the fact that I sailed hither.' Ussing prefers taking ut = postquam, and he may be right, but see note on ut iacui, 5. 1. 15, and compare Bacch. 1. 1. 73, ut in navi vecta es, credo, timida es, where the meaning 'since' is out of place.

176. inanis, 'empty handed' ; As. 3. 3. 70. cum onere : cf. Poen. 4. 2. 30, Haud amice facis qui cum onere affers moram, a strange elliptical expression for onus portanti.

177. Certe enim, 'surely some one is talking here.' enim: see on 2. 2. 26 infra.

178. nescioquem, 'somebody,' like Οὔτις, Ulysses's pseudonym 'Nobody.' certo, 'of a truth': on the difference between certo and certe, see Langen, p. 22-31.

179. enim, 'yes,' see 177. dextera: abl. I am not sure that I am right in abandoning the order of the MSS. with Goetz and Leo. dextera might be pronounced as if written dextra. Mueller in his Nachtrag withdraws the statement he had made on Ritschl's authority that dextra is never dissyllabic in Plautus, quoting Merc. 965, Cette dextras nunciam, and 879, Réspice ad dextram Charine. See note on prospere, 1. 2. 1 infra. verberat: Cf. Tac. Agr. 41, Quibus sermonibus satis constat Domitiani quoque aures verberatas. Most 4. 1. 204, ne mihi ut surdo verbera aures.

180. vicem, 'in place of.' Vicem is an adverbial accusative. Cf. Capt. 2. 3. 37, ut eum redimat et remittat nostrum huc amborum vicem. Most. 2. 1. 8, meam vicem. Truc. 1. 2. 57, et nostram et illorum vicem.

184. ilicet, 'it is all over.' "C'est fait de moi!" Molière's Amph. Act 1. Sc. 2. ilicet, properly ire licet, is said to have been a formula pronounced by the crier dismissing judices at the conclusion of a case, Donatus on Phorm. 1. 4. 31, or spectators at the end of a sacrifice, or the senate, Servius on Aen. 2. 424. It is often used as an exclamation of despair, like actum est, with which it was often joined. Cist. 4. 2. 17, actum est! ilicet! me infelicem et scelestam; Ter. Eun. 1. 1. 9, actumst, ilicet, peristi; Ibid 2. 4. 57, ilicet: desine: iam conclamatumst.

185. conloqui takes the accusative many times in Plautus: cf. 3. 2. 17 infra, te volo, uxor conloqui. The construction with cum is much rarer, Pers. 4. 2. 7; 4. 7. 18. contra: adverbial, as generally, Brix and Tyrrell say always, in Plautus.

186. qui, the abl. which has grown into a conjunction = quo, ut.

187. Volcanum in cornu. The bombastic grandiloquence of these words at once recalls Pistol to the reader's mind, a character of whom we are often thus reminded in Plautus. Lanterns were often made of horn in ancient times. Ussing quotes Athen. 15. 699f, κερατίνου δὲ φωσφόρου λύχνου σέλας.

Lucr. 2. 388, Praeterea lumen per cornum transit. Mart. 14. 62, speaks of a lantern made of bladder :

Cornea si non sum, numquid sum fuscior? aut me
Vesicam, contra qui venit, esse putat?

Pliny, 11. 126, tells us that the horns of the urus made excellent lanterns, diffusing the light well.

189. Utcumque animo conlubitumst meo: Ter. And. 1. 5. 28, Quae meo cumque animo lubitumst facere: 'just as I choose.' As. 1. 1. 97.

190. Ain, here a spondee, as 147 supra. Aio enim: there is hiatus at the change of speakers, and enim, as often, is a pyrrhic. Mentire nunc: because Mercury had said verbero (scoundrel), which Sosia pretends to understand as the present indicative. The mss. give mentiris nunc, which I have altered to mentire with Bothe, not because aphaeresis of s is rare in this place, as Ussing says, for this is just the very place where aphaeresis of s is most common (see Note on Amphitruonis sum, 257 infra), but because Plautus much prefers the form in -e to the form in -is; 'almost exclusively,' Brix on Mil. 2. 6. 25.

191. dicere. There is no occasion to suppose that the last syllable of dicere is long here. The last syllable of a dactylic word frequently takes the metrical accent. Without going outside Terence we find so accented dicere, And. Prol. 23; Pamphile, And. 1. 5. 32; Byrrhia, Ibid. 2. 1. 1; dicere, Ibid. 2. 5. 26; nubere, Ibid. 3. 3. 3; turpiter, Eun. 2. 1. 24; Chaerea, Ibid. 4. 4. 39; omnia, Ibid. 4. 7. 19; filius, Heaut. 2. 1. 5; omnia, Ibid. 5. 1. 69; 5. 5. 11; Phaëdria, Ibid. 5. 52; credere, Ibid. 5. 9. 7; Pamphile, Hec. 3. 1. 10; 4. 3. 15; Aeschinus, Ad. 2. 3. 7; virgine, Ad. 3. 2. 48; Sostrata, Ibid. 3. 2. 45; rectius, Ibid. 4. 1. 5; Aeschinus, Ibid. 4. 2. 49; 4. 4. 26; virginis, Ibid. 4. 3. 7; Pamphila, 4. 4. 11; scilicet, 5. 3. 53. The large proportion of proper names, however, show that it was semi-licentious. In this play we have so accented Iuppiter, Prol. 94; ipsemet, 102; aedibus, 2. 2. 68; aedibus, 3. 2. 1. It is to be noticed that this accentuation generally takes place in the third foot from the end, and often where there is a strong stop: often at change of speakers: Brix on Mil. 1. 1. 27.

193. numquid nunc es certior, 'are you any the wiser?'

196. Since writing my Critical Note I have had the satisfaction of finding the following confirmation of my conjecture in Ter. And. 5. 2. 8, quid istic tibi negotist? DA. Mihin'?

197. vigiles singulos, 'separate sentries.' This proves the truth of singuli (conquaestores), Prol. 65.

198. Bene facit, καλῶς γε ποιῶν. tutatust domi, 'he has kept watch and ward at home.' It would be easy enough to read domum with inferior MSS. but the locative is defended by Ter. Eun. 4. 7. 10, solus Sannio servat domi. Cist. 1. 1. 107, Sinas esse hic et servare apud me.

199. familiares, 'the family servants.'

200. Nescio quam. Luchs objected (Hermes, 6. p. 270) to shortening the last syllable of nescio, except in the phrase nescio quis, and wished to transpose tu and familiaris; but if any change is made the threatening at scin quam tu familiaris sis? proposed by Becker is far preferable.

201. faxo. Ussing discusses the truth of Madvig's dictum, Opusc. 2. 75, that faxo in Plautus and Terence is only joined with another future, in a parenthetical manner. The MSS. give nearly 50 examples of a future, 16 of a present subjunctive, and as ut is added, Asin. 893, and as the analogy of facere ut (e.g. faciam ut offendas domi, Amph. 2. 1. 68) and facere sit shows that there is nothing incorrect in the subjunctive, Ussing seems right in refusing to alter the MSS. where they preserve that mood.

202. horunc, 'of the people here.' at scin quomodo, a common formula of Plautus; generally used of threatening: Rud. 3. 5. 18; L. Tangam hercle vero; D. Tange: sed scin quomodo? Generally it is obvious what word should be supplied from the context, as in the example just given tanges should be supplied: in this passage it is not quite so clear: probably we should supply tibi res se habet, which is actually used in Aul. 1. 1. 8. at scin quomodo tibi res se habet? Ussing is quite wrong in saying that it refers back to Mercury's last speech, accipiere faxo haud familiariter. Although generally used as a threatening formula it is not always: e.g. Aul. 2. 4. 2S, it is used as a preface to an intensive remark.

203. superbum, as carried on a litter, on which rich men were carried : but Mercury means Sosia would be borne off dead. The author must have had Eur. Bacch. 968, in his mind :

ΔΙ. φερόμενος ἤξεις. ΙΙΕ. ἀβρότητ' ἐμὴν λέγεις.

ΔΙ. ἐν χερσὶ μητρός. ΙΙΕ. καὶ τρυφᾶν μ' ἀναγκάσεις.

205. familiai : the genitive in -āi is common in Plautus, Ennius, Lucretius, Cicero's poems ; Virgil uses it four times. Terence avoided it unless Cliniai, Heaut. 3. 2. 4, be the true reading.

206. quam mox : cf. quam mox seco ? Mil. 5. 13 ; quam mox coctum est prandium ? Rud. 2. 3. 12.

210. Quid ais ? 'Dis done,' the American 'say.' It introduces a question in Plautus, as our 'I say' does. It is a very common Plautine formula.

212. tu istic, 'you yourself there.' Tu istic occurs several times in Plautus, infra 2. 1. 25, 2. 2. 116. Istic is, I believe, generally taken as the adverb, 'you there,' but it is, I believe, the nominative case, like the Greek voc. οὗτος. It is in favour of this view that the latter syllable of istic is never found certainly long in this phrase. istic, in fact, is the ipse of the second person.

213. columen : the older form for culmen : 'the height of impudence.' The collision of m with several of the consonants was avoided in old Latin. See on Arg. 1. 3 ; and Brix on Trin. 2. 4. 23. consutis dolis, 'with patched-up lies.' Ussing compares ῥάπτειν δόλους, and Capt. 3. 5. 34, ob sutelas tuas te mortī misero. Lambinus compares μηχανόβραφος.

214. Ussing refers to Varro L.L. 5. 131, Gell. 10. 15. 3, Aul. 4. 4. 20, Quintil. 11. 3. 138, Pers. 364, Calpurn. 3. 29, to show that two tunics were usually worn, called indusium and subucula. The term tunica was, however, generally reserved for the outer tunic, the inner being called subucula. Hor. Ep. 1. 1. 95 : Si forte subucula pexae trita subest tunicae.

215. etiam, 'you are lying now,' 'you are actually lying'; not, I think, you 'are still lying,' nor 'you are lying again.' The following are the chief idiomatic usages of etiam in Plautus :—(1) Actually, as Bacch. 2. 3. 97, etiam rogas ? 'can you ask ?' (2) in expostulations, 'wont you even ?' 'can't you ?' as Most. 2. 1. 36, etiam vigilas ? Trin. 2. 4. 113, etiam tu taces? (3) 'still' or 'again,' as Aul. 1. 1. 16, abscede etiam nunc: etiam nunc, etiam: ohe! Most. 2. 2. 43, circumspice etiam; (4) 'yet,' especially with negatives, As. 2. 4. 39, non etiam = nondum; Most. 2. 1. 30, quid illi reditio huc etiam fuit? (5) 'yes' or 'oh yes' in replies, as infra 1. 2. 46, where see Note.

pedibus non tunicis venis. Cf. Mil. 3. 13, Qui lubitum est illi condormiscere? Lu. Oculis opinor. Merc. 1. 2. 71: Qui potuit videre? Ac. Oculis. Ch. Quo pacto? Ac. Hiantibus. This class of jest is familiar to readers of Shakespeare, cf. e.g. Hamlet, Act 5. Sc. 1, "How came he mad?" "Faith, e'en with losing his wits." "Upon what ground?" "Why, here in Denmark." Cf. also Molière, Bourgeois Gentilhomme, Act 3. Sc. 5, "Comment se porte-elle?" "Elle se porte sur ses deux jambes."

216. Ita profecto, 'very true,' sarcastically said, as much as to say there is no great wit in stating such an obvious truth.

217. ingratiis, 'whether you will or no': the opposite is gratiis, which in Plautus always means 'for nothing.' Neither ingratiis nor gratiis are ever found in Plautus with the last two syllables contracted into one. See Tyrrell, Miles, 2. 5.
39. I may observe that Poen. 1. 1. 6 should be thus written:

Quibus pro benefactis fateor deberi tibi Et libertatem et multas grates gratiis,

i.e. 'and many thanks into the bargain.' The mss. give gratias.

218. arbitrarium, 'a matter of opinion'; it is not a question about which two opinions can be held.

219. tuam fidem is governed by obsecro.

220. praeut, 'in comparison with.' Bacch. 4. 9. 5, praeut ego erum expugnabo meum, where it is more pregnant than here. It is used five or six times by Plautus.

221. pugnis usu fecisti tuom, 'you have established a claim to me with your fists.' usu facere, the legal phrase for establishing a claim to a thing by occupation, by not having one's ownership disturbed for a certain time. Sosia's pummelling has been of so long duration as to give Mercury a claim to his ownership.

222. pro fidem! 'Help, help!' Properly 'I appeal to your honour, citizens of Thebes.' Etiam clamas. Etiam is not, I think, 'also,' but 'actually,' an intensive meaning it often has in Plautus; 215 supra. 'Oh, you'll shout, will you!'

224. istoc, on that account, i.e. for saying that.

227. Etiam muttis, 'are you still daring to mutter?' Muttire = submissa voce loqui, so, of course, stronger than if Mercury had merely said loqueris. Etiam, 'still,' a common usage in Plautus, 215 supra.

228. vocare. Plautus much prefers the form in -re to that in -ris, 190 supra.

229. peccaveram, 'I made a mistake.' pecco is often used of verbal slips. Bacch. 3. 3. 29, Cum librum legeres si unam peccarisses syllabam; Cas. 2. 6. 18, Per pol saepe peccas. The use of the pluperfect for a perfect or imperfect is common in Plautus, and, like many Plautine features, reappears in Propertius. In Most. 3. 2. 136 a point is made from the double meaning of empti fuerant: see Sonnenschein ad loc.

230. Nam Amphitruonis socium sane me esse volui dicere, 'I certainly meant to say I was Amphitruo's comrade.' Sosia plays on the similarity of sound of socium and Sosiam. This passage has always been a stumbling block to those who hold it absolutely certain that c was pronounced exactly as k. The Bishop of Salisbury. Frag. and Spec. p. 28, says this "play on Sosiam and socium may well be excused in the Umbrian Plautus," the Umbrians having employed a soft-sounding letter to represent c before e and i. Bishop Wordsworth adds that s was employed by the Volscians, e.g. fasia = faciat, and he quotes as an instance outside Umbria the word Losna on a mirror found at Praeneste, where Losna stands for Lucna, Lucina, Luna, the moon.

For the ms. reading and suggestions of this much disputed verse, see Crit. Note. Sane for ne seems to me the simplest correction. Sane volo is of frequent occurrence. Cic. Fam. 3. 5, sane vellem potuisset obsequi voluntati tuae; Ter. Heaut. 4. 8. 31, sane volo; Id. Ad. 5. 1. 13, sane nollem huc exitum; Trin. 1. 2. 20, sane velim.

232. fugit te ratio, 'you made a slip,' prop. 'a slip in adding up accounts.' It was a common colloquialism. Catull. 10. 29:—

Istud, quod modo dixeram, me habere,
Fugit me ratio; meus sodalis Cinna est Gaius: is sibi paravit.

233. Vtinam idem istuc, etc., 'I wish your fists had done the same,' and missed me. I have inserted idem relying on numerous passages, among the rest Curc. 4. 3. 9, Idem ego istuc quom credebam; Most. 5. 1. 78, Dixi istuc idem illi; Stich. 3. 2. 20, Idem ego istuc scio; Ter. Phorm. 4. 5. 15, Idem ego istuc facere possum.

235. indutiae: Mercury will not allow peace, only a short armistice, ἐκεχειρία.

237. credo, 'am I to trust?' deliberative present. See on Prol. 56. fide: old dative, so die, 122 supra.

meae: 'yes' is usually expressed in Latin by the repetition of an important word from the question.

238. Quid, si fal'es? cf. Aristoph. Vesp. 524:

ΒΔ. εἰπέ μοι, τί' δ', ἦν, τὸ δεῖνα, τῇ διαίτῃ μὴ ῥυμένῃς;
ΦΙ. μηδέποτε πλοῦμ' ἄκρατον μισθὸν ἀγαθοῦ δαίμονος.

241. foedus ici: Cic. Balb. 15. 34, Cum Gaditanis foedus icisse dicitur; Id. Pis. 12. 28, Foedus, quod meo sanguine in pactione provinciarum iceras.

244. hodie: a colloquialism, adding intensity, often used with negatives. Ter. Ad. 4. 2. 31, Scio ubi sit, verum hodie numquam monstrabo; infra, 272, Id quidem hodie numquam poterit dicere. Horace, Sat. 2. 7. 21, reproduces the comic idiom, Non dices hodie quorsum haec tam putida tendant? Donatus on Ter. Ad. 2. 2. 7, quoted by Brix on Merc. 1. 3. 36, says: hodie non tempus significat, sed iracundiam, eloquentiam, ac stomachum.

245. noster, 'Sosia of ours.' Noster is here practically = 'myself.' It properly meant 'one of our familia.' Horace again repeats this idiom in the well-known (Sat. 2. 6. 48) Per totum hoc tempus subiectior in diem et horas Invidiae noster. The expression is of domestic origin.

249. quid, malum, 'what, plague take it!' Malum is always, in this sense, in interrogations, and generally closely follows the interrogative, as in the English expression.

250. hac noctu: supra, vs. 118. ex portu Persico: the portus Persicus must be a harbour in, near, or on the way home from the islands of the Teleboae, whence Amphitruo and Sosia sailed back to the harbour of Thebes. Festus, p. 217, says, Persicum portum Plautus cum ait, mare Euboicum videtur significare, quod in eo classis Persarum dicitur stetisse non procul a Thebis, and Plautus may have meant some harbour in the Euripus, which he, regardless of the anachronism, calls portus Persicus. in portum, which I have inserted, means 'into harbour,' i.e. into the harbour, which Plautus, careless of geography, gave to Thebes. In portu may have fallen out easily before ex portu. Huc which is usually inserted to fill up the lacuna would scarcely be right, for huc in the next line means the very place they are now standing, and the ship had not brought them thither. Cf. Pers. 4. 4. 28: nam heri in portum noctu navis venit.

252. nonne: the view now generally obtaining is that Spengel's statement that Plautus did not use nonne is not proved. It is, however, likely that he wrote non med here, and that he only used nonne before vowels. We must, however, be content with uncertainty on this as many other points of Plautine lore. As a rule the meaning of nonne is expressed by non, by -ne (as sumne autem nihili? Bacch. 1. 1. 89, or by satin as 2. 2. 1).

257. Amphitruonis sum: s is elided, or dropped in pronunciation, as often in Plautus and the old writers. This is common in Lucretius, once in Catullus. When Ussing states on vs. 190 supra that aphaeresis of s in fine versus offendit, when Bothe and others change the reading here to get rid of that aphaeresis, they are strangely mistaken; this is the place of all others where aphaeresis of s is admitted. The following instances in Terence will be sufficient:—Nullus sum, And. 3. 4. 20; fretus sim, Ibid. 3. 5. 13; admiratus sis, Heaut. 4. 6. 22; abusus sis, Phorm. 2. 3. 66; iussus sum, Ibid. 4. 4. 2; auctus sit, Hec. 3. 1. 40; defessus sum, Ibid. 3. 4. 29; incertus sum, Ibid. 3. 4. 36; expertus sum, Ibid. 3. 5. 39; ita tempus fert, Ad. 5. 3. 53; desertus sum, Ibid. 5. 4. 19, all at the end of lines.

260. vi pugnando: Ussing quotes Asin. 548; Merc. 1032 for this phrase, and Vatinius, ap. Cic. Ep. 5. 10. 4, sex oppida vi oppugnando cepi. The form of the sentence is "sollemnis": see the inscription on the Columna Rostrata, Wordsworth, p. 170. If the restoration of that inscription there given is correct, pugnando vicit occurs as well as pugnando cepit. See Crit. Note.

263. hic quidem: hic is always short before quidem in Plautus, so much so that Luchs invariably writes hiquidem. This is better than to suppose quidem slurred or pronounced quidē. memorat memoriter: Ussing quotes Capt. 2. 1. 53: on which passage Brix quotes many similar turns: nitide nitet, Truc. 2. 4. 3: propere properas, Curc. 4. 3. 3: cupide cupis, Cas. 2. 3. 49: tacitus taceas, Epid. 5. 1. 44: madide madere, Pseud. 5. 2. 7, etc. Memoriter is, as Brix says, not 'from memory,' but 'with good memory,' 'accurately.' Cf. As. 3. 2. 38, memoriter vocabat, 'he remembered to call me.'

264. quid ais? See 210 supra.

268. captas, 'why are you trying to catch me,' to put me in the wrong. Forcellini says the word means insidiari in sermone, and quotes Cic. Acad. 2. 94, Quid enim ad illum qui te captare vult, utrum tacentem irretiat te an loquentem? It is used in Men. 4. 2. 83 of putting a false construction on words, Viden uti scelestus captat? huic surreptast non tibi.

271. nam quod egomet solus feci, nec quisquam alius adfuit: an Epic paratactic construction, reminding the reader of many similar constructions in Homer.

273. quom pugnabant maxume: 1. 1. 197.

276. Eam ... meri, 'Then I drained it of wine, as pure as it came from its mother.' The mother is the grape. Lipsius, quoted by Goetz and Loewe, cites Eur. Alc. 756 sq.:

ποτῆρα δ' ἐν χείρεσσι κίσσινον λαβὼν πίνει μελαίνης μητρὸς εὐζωρον μέθυ.

The genitive meri seems to depend on eduxi in the sense of 'making empty of.' I know of no exact parallel to it, but it seems quite sound; see Roby, vol. ii. ed. 4, p. 136, where lists of genitives of the thing lacking or supplied are given: among them is Rud. 1. 4. 27, me omnium iam laborum levas. For eduxi cp. Stich. 5. 5. 18, si hoc eduxeris: 5. 6. 1, Tene tu: hoc educe, 'toss it off.'

277. hirnea was a small jar of earthenware for holding wine, Cato, R. R. 81. The forms cirnea and cyrnea are given in Nonius, and irnea is also found in mss. We have the diminutives hirnula, Cic. Parad. 1. 11 (Ussing), and hirnella or irnella, Festus. In spite of Grimm's law I fancy our 'churn,' originally an earthen vessel, must be connected with hirnea.

280. qui egomet siem: the antecedent to qui is Sosia, understood from the previous verse. Supply te esse Sosiam. See 220 supra, qui ego sum.

284. saltem: Men. 4. 2. 60, Num mihi es irata saltem? 'at least you are not angry with me?' Sosia: I cannot believe with Ussing that Plautus either here or in the next verse lengthened the last syllable of Sosia when the correction in both places is so simple: id or hoc inserted here by Mueller is borne out by 2. 1. 64, Sosia, hoc dici volo.

286. ignobilis, 'unknown': cf. Pseud. 4. 2. 9, quoted by Ussing, Peregrina facies videtur hominis atque ignobilis; Ibid. 2. 1. 18. But 'without a name' is what Mercury should say: therefore I should much prefer Bothe's good conjecture, ignominis.

287. contemplo: see on 3. 2. 3 infra. cognosco, 'think over,' 'examine,' mentally, as the next line shows.

289. petasum: supra, Prolog. 143. atque, 1. 1. 120: 'he is as like (to me) as I am.'

290. tonsus, archaic for tonsura. nasum, archaic for nasus; it is used several times by Plautus. Conversely dorsus is used for dorsum, Mil. 2. 4. 44, Ita dorsus totus prurit; and collus, in the next verse is a common archaic form for collum; Capt. 2. 2. 107, collus collari caret. So corius, Poen. 1. 1. 11; tergus, As. 2. 2. 53. vel: see Crit. Note for defence of this word.

294. sane sapio, 'I am in my sound senses' (not sane, 'certainly'): Curc. 1. 3. 20, Nam bonum est pauxillum amare sane, insane non bonum est. The phrase sane sapere occurs several times in Plautus.

295. non obtempero, 'I won't mind what he says.' The present with non is much more idiomatic than the future in stating a refusal. Most. 3. 1. 67, non dat, non debet; Ter. Phorm. 4. 3. 64, Nil do: impuratus me ille ut etiam irrideat;

And. 2. 2. 15, uxorem tibi non dat iam Chremes; Phorm. 2. 3. 41, non dico; Tim. 4. 3. 65, non sto; As. 2. 4. 63, Nemo accipit: aufer te domum.

296. quo agis te, 'where are you off to?' Quo te agis and unde te agis were common colloquialisms: cf. me ducam, 4. 3. 8.

si inscendas ... poteris, not an uncommon consecution of moods with si, though as a general rule si takes the same mood in both clauses: see on Hor. Sat. 2. 1. 20 and Addenda.

300. lumbifragium, formed on the analogy of nauffragium.

301. ubi ego perii, 'where did I lose myself?'

303. illic, probably at the harbour, where he had left his master. sed (written s;) is often corrupted into si, and vice versa. It seems to me the preferable reading here.

305. vivo fit ... mihi, i.e. 'my image is being carried.' In grand funerals busts of ancestors were carried. Ussing quotes Sueton. Vesp. 19: Archimimus personam eius ferens imitansque, ut est mos, dicta et facta vivi. Sosia being a slave, and, as such, having no ancestors in law, could have no images carried at his funeral. Here, however, Mercury was carrying his image, i.e. wearing his likeness. It has been proposed to take the passage differently: Mercury is making game of me; games will never be held in my honour when I am dead. That is the meaning of Most. 4. 1. 80 sq., Ludos ego hodie vivo praesenti hic seni Faciam, quod credo mortuo numquam fore.

307. quod ille faxit Iuppiter, 'and may high Jupiter grant that he does!' ille, intensive, used in appeals to heaven, 'Great Jupiter.' Ussing quotes Curc. 27, Nec me ille sirit Iuppiter; Cic. Cat. 3. 9. 22, ille Iuppiter restitit; Most. 391, and Pseud. 928, ita ille faxit Iuppiter. The slave hopes his master may disown him, in which case he will be free.

308. raso capite ... pilleum. It was customary for slaves on manumission to shave their hair and wear the pilleus or pileum, a felt skull-cap, until their hair was grown. Cf. Persius, 5. 82, Haec mera libertas, haec nobis pilea donant. The shaving of the hair was probably a thanksgiving to the gods; so sailors shaved their hair on escaping shipwreck, Juv. 12. 81, gaudent ubi vertice raso Garrula securi narrare pericula.

nautae. The ceremony of receiving the cap was performed, according to Servius, in the temple of Feronia, the goddess of freedmen.

ACT I. 2.

Mercury, left alone, explains to the spectators how Jupiter's intrigue will result.

This scene, which could be excised without loss, is possibly later than Plautus, perhaps by the same hand as the Prologue. There are several metrical licenses, a direct contradiction of the whole tenor of the plot, vs. 20, and an extremely intricate construction, vss. 25, 26.

1. prosp're. Modern critics generally limit synaloephae such as this to anapaestic metre, especially anapaestic octonarii. But it is reasonable to suppose that the ecthipsis of a vowel either before or after r and l is common in all comic metres. Ter. Andr. 1. 1. 25:

Libërius vivendi fuit potestas, nam ántea.

Id. Phorm. 5. 8. 8:

Quid ád me ibatis? rídiculum vërebámini.

Id. Eun. 2. 2. 53:

Qui mihi nunc uno dígitulo föres áperis fortunátus.

Cf. Ennius's Epitaph on Africanus, ap. Cic. de Leg. 22. 57:

Hic est ille situs, cui nemo civis neque hostis
Quivit pro factis reddere opërae pretium.

So perhaps dextërá, supra 1. 1. 179, with the mss. Such contractions as ultra, citra, intra, supra, extra show the bent of the language. So no doubt erus, erit, fores, foras, perit, parum, viri, and many other words were slurred. Those who refuse to admit this very natural process, often are obliged to admit a very awkward proceleusmaticus, as in the line from the Eunuchus just quoted. Relying on this principle I would emend a difficult passage, Phorm. 2. 3. 20:

At quem virum! quem ego viderim in vita optimum.
GETA. Videas te atque illum, ut narras.

I propose to read vidēras. Geta retorts, 'to judge from what you say (ut narras), you had only seen yourself and him.' If he is the best man you ever saw in your life, you could have seen only yourself and him, you being the worst man in the world, he the next worst to you.

The most common instances of synaloepha of the vowel before or after l are malus, volo, velim, vel, voluptas, voluntas, Philippi; before or after n, bonus, senex, sine, venustas. The principle of slurring and the metrical accent worked together. Even if the reader or speaker did not actually slur the word, the fact that he felt able to do so, by the help of the liquid, contributed to his allowing its proper weight to the metrical accent, and accounts for the large proportion of instances in which words with liquids furnish exceptions to the ordinary law of position.

hoc operis, 'this piece of work.' This genitive is common in Plautus; hoc negoti is the commonest instance, so hoc villi, 'this little drop of wine'; Ter. Ad. 5. 2. 11. All genders are joined with hoc: hoc clamoris, Aul. 2. 9. 8.

8. adeo is often used in Plautus when a new step in a narration is come to; 'further' = autem, see Note on 2. 2. 46.

9. omnem Amphitruonis. This seems to be a similar hiatus to those which occur in the Prologue. The writer seems to have considered himself justified in introducing hiatus freely with proper names, cf. 24 infra; but he has exceeded the license which Plautus permitted himself in this particular.

11. igitur demum, 'then and not before.' Igitur is generally temporal in Plautus, often joined with tum and demum. Cf. 1. 1. 147, Crit. Note; 3. 1. 16; Mil. 3. 1. 177; Most. 3. 1. 159; 1. 2. 51. Igitur demum is much like οὐτω δῆ.

13. This is a frightful line as it appears in the mss. But the licenses are too great for us to suppose that even a Prologue writer, who, though he does not come up to Plautus's art, does not fall very far short of it, would have so written it. It must be corrupt, and the transposition of Lindemann, with change of coniugis to coniugi, is the best remedy proposed.

14. turbas conciet, 'have a row with.' Another expression is sufflavit se uxori suae, Cas. 3. 3. 19, 'has blown up his wife.'

16. seditio is used of jars between husband and wife, tending to their separation. Ter. Andr. 5. 1. 11, Filiam ut darem in seditionem atque incertas nuptias. Cicero says of Clodia, ad Att. 2. 15, ea est enim seditiosa, ea cum viro bellum gerit, which, as Tyrrell has pointed out, is clearly a line from some dramatic poet. I would insert suo, making it a trochaic :

Ea ést enim seditiosa, ea cum [súo] viro bellúm gerit.

17. dudum quod dixi minus, 'what I left unsaid a while ago.'

20. seminatust: only here in Plautus. septumo: this contradicts the play, which apparently represents the birth of the twins to have taken place the same day as Amphitruo arrived from foreign parts.

25. 'My father has provided that it should be brought about by one parturition, that,' etc. The sentence uno ut labore absolvat is the subject of fieret.

26. absolvat. In ordinary writing an imperfect would be expected, but in Plautus a present subjunctive generally follows a past tense when the action is future. The following are some of the more remarkable consecutions of moods in the comic writers, some of which throw light on the construction of this passage: Pseud. 3. 2. 6, quin ob eam rem Orcus recipere ad se noluit ut esset hic qui mortuis cenam coquat; Ter. Ad. 3. 2. 18, Sublimem medium arriperem et capite pronum in terram statuerem Ut cerebro dispergat viam. These passages, with that before us seem to show that the continuation of a consequence may be in the present subjunctive, the consequence itself having been in the imperfect. Other striking consecutions are Bacch. 4. 4. 38, ego patrem exoravi. Nempe ergo hoc ut faceret, quod loquor? Immo tibi ne noceat; Cist. 3. 1. 5, Hic crepundia insunt quibuscum te illa ad me detulit Quae mihi dedit parentes ut te cognoscant facilius; Bacch. 2. 3. 118, ita feci ut aurum quantum vellet sumeret, Quantum autem lubeat reddere ut reddat patri. I leave the reader to adopt the most plausible theory for the consecution in these and other cases given by Rothe in his Quaest. Gramm. p. 2 seqq, merely remarking that these passages teach us to be slow to alter consecutions testified by the mss. The imperfect fieret is the natural tense after curavit, the attention being called to the act that Jupiter had willed a certain thing: the present is the natural tense here, as the attention is called to what that thing is, which is still in the future.

Of the emendations which have been proposed I should prefer Ribbeck's liberet, which occurred independently to myself: 'my father has taken care to deliver her by one birth.' But I do not think any emendation necessary.

I have proposed feret et for fieret: but, though a verb feo, whence come fetus, femina, etc., may well have existed, I have not been able to find a clear instance of prosodiacal shortening of -et in the imperfect subjunctive in Plautus.

27. et ne, 'and that she may not,' still epexegetic of fieret.

28. consuetio, 'intimacy.' Ter. Ad. 4. 5. 32, qui cum ea consuevit prior.

33. expetere in, 'fall upon the head of,' so that she should bear the consequences. Cf. 3. 1. 12 infra; Liv. 1. 22. 7, ut in eum omnes expetant huiusce cladis belli. It is used with dative, 3. 1. 12; with accusative, 3. 2. 15; absolutely, 1. 1. 20.

35. eccum (ecce eum) and eccillum have three constructions, (1) most commonly, without affecting the construction, with a nominative and verb, as here; (2) with an accusative, as Most. 3. 1. 33, sed Philolachetis eccum servom Tranium; (3) with an accusative and verb, as Miles, 4. 6. 7, sed eccum Palaestrionem stat cum milite. See Brix, Capt. 5. 4. 8. subditivos, 'counterfeit': also subditicius, Pseud. 3. 4. 62, which is the classical word.

36. usuraria, 'borrowed.'

ACT I. 3.

Jupiter, in the guise of Amphitruo, takes leave of Alcmena on pretence of being obliged to return to the army.

1. Bene vale. Plautus and Terence often join bene to valere. Epid. 1. 2. 26, Benene usque valuisti? So Bacch. 2. 3. 14.

2. inperce, 'take care of yourself': the verb inpercere is found Cas. 4. 4. 12. The regular phrase for taking care of one's health is sibi parcere. Hor. Ep. 1. 7. 11, Ad mare descendet vates tuus, et sibi parcat; Sat. 1. 4. 127, avidos vicinum funus ut aegros Exanimat mortisque metu sibi parcere cogit; Mart.

1. 107. 10, Quid parcis tibi, Rufe? dormiendum est, to a diluter of his wine. Tibi must be supplied from the second clause, as there is no authority for using the verb without a case.

3. tollito. Referring to the custom of a father taking up the newly born child and acknowledging it. Ter. And. 1. 3. 14, Quidquid peperisset decreverunt tollere; Mil. 2. 3. 22, Verum enim tu istam, si te di ament, temere hau tollas fabulam, 'you would not father that story' (Tyrrell). quod, neuter, for an obvious reason. Cicero is not to be excused in the same way for saying of his new-born child ad Att. 10. 18, Quod quidem est natum perimbecillum est.

5. *distae*deat: dis seems to have an intensive force in this verb, as in discupio, *dispu*det, disperii. It occurs Ter. Phorm. 5. 8. 22; Masur. Sabin. ap. Macrob. Sat. 3. 6, Postquam artis distisus suae est.

6. adest ad exercitum: see on Pro. 125.

7. quod. It is possible, but not certain, that quod is an archaic abl. as Ritschl supposed; it may be the nom. Both constructions, two ablatives, and nominative and ablative, are used by Plautus. Ussing quotes for the latter istuc exquisito opus est infra, 2. 1. 83; 2. 2. 159. So Cist. 1. 2. 10; Ter. Hec. 5. 4. 38. With pronouns, the nominative (quid, quod, istuc, facto usus est) is more usual. As to the S. C. of Cic. Fam. 8. 8. 5, si quid de ea re ad populum plebemve lato opus esset, quoted by Ussing, Ritschl would have replied that quid was there the ablative, and was naturally preserved in an ancient formula, though perhaps misunderstood to be a nominative. See Note, 2. 2. 87 infra.

8. scitus sycophanta, 'a clever rogue.' Graphicus is sometimes used by Plautus in this sense: 'knowing' is the primary idea. Scitus is applied by Plautus to a female figure, satis scitum filum mulieris, 'a fine figure of a woman'; Merc. 4. 4. 15; scitus puer, Ter. Andr. 3. 2. 16, is 'a fine boy.' Plautus puns on the word, Pseud. 2. 4. 58, Ecquid is homo scitust? CHA. Plebiscitum non est scitius, 'a statute is not as astute.' In classical Latin the word only retained the sense of 'clever,' 'witty.'

qui quidem meus sit pater, (and no wonder) for he is my father. Mercury is the patron of roguery. Hor. Carm. 1. 10.
9. qui ... sit, giving the reason of the mental ellipse.

9. Ussing says that the text is proved to be unsound by the future palpabitur. That is not so, the future is perfectly correct. There is nothing strange that Mercury should say 'watch him, how he will coax the woman.' palpabitur, 'stroke her'; the word is applied properly to 'stroking,' 'patting' horses: cf. Hor. Sat. 2. 1. 18, Cui male si palpere, recalcitrat undique tutus, where palpari takes the dative, as here; the accusative is generally used after palpare, perhaps after palpari, Lucil. 799 (Lach.). Servius on Aen. 11. 728 read suppalpatur mulieri, Donatus on Ter. ProL. Ad. 2, palpetur mulieri. The former was probably a reminiscence of matri suppalparier, Mil. 2. 1. 28.

12. illa: i.e. tua uxor, Juno.

13. ego faxim, 'I'll warrant,' a common colloquialism. Merc. 4. 6. 10, Ecce ego faxim si itidem plectantur viri, Plures viri sint vidui quam nunc mulieres.

15. lectūs, genitive. The archaic declension of lectus is testified by Priscian, who quotes this passage, and Cornificius de etymis deorum, for the nom. plural, 'ipsis vero ad Cereris memoriae novandae gratiam lectus sternuntur' (Ussing). In Cat. 57. 7, the best ms. (O) preserves lecticulo, which must have come from a form of the fourth declension. See Munro, Crit. and Eluc. p. 132. concaluit, 'had time to get warm.' ubi cubuisti: bad though the diaeresis is, Bothe's transposition is unlikely, as the evidence for ubi in Plautus is weak: for ibi weaker still, as Mueller says.

17. subparasitabor, 'back him up' by taking his part like a parasite.

19. ecfictim amare, 'to love to distraction,' was a common phrase with the old dramatists = deperire.

21. hanc rem curatio aut muttitio, 'what business have you to interfere with this matter, or to mutter a syllable about it?' Verbal nouns in -io often are found in the old writers governing the case which the verb, from which they are derived, governed. Ussing gives the following list: Asin. 5. 2. 70, Quid tibi hunc receptio ad te est? Aul. 4. 10. 14, Quid tibi nos tactio est? a phrase which occurs several times in other plays. Most. 1. 1. 33, Quid tibi me aut quid ego agam curatio est? Rul. 2. 6. 18, Quid mihi scelestio tibi erat auscultatio? Quidve hinc abutio, quidve in navem incensio? Caecil. v. 62

It will be noticed that in all these passages the verbal is introduced by quid ... est, and the sentence invariably means 'what business have you to do so and so?' But in Capt. 3. 3. 4, Neque exitium exitiost, 'there is no getting away from destruction,' the usage is different, there being no question, though there is in the other passage, where the nom. exitio is used, Truc. 2. 6. 30, Quid illi ex utero exitio est? Stich. 2. 1. 9 is another exception: Quae miseri in expectationest Epignomi adventum viri.

22. The insertion of the second iam belongs to Spengel, Plaut. p. 226; it is adopted by Ussing. I overlooked this when writing my Critical Note. Nor is it necessary to read quoiei, as quoi is legitimately in hiatus, being a monosyllable in the first foot of a resolved arsis.

The aposiopesis is not caused by the intervention of Alcmena, but is caused by the fact that Jupiter is about to substitute action for word, and bring his staff down on Mercury. It is also helped by the fact that an aposiopesis is usual with threats. Virgil's (Aen. 1. 135) Quos ego...sed motos praestat componere fluctus is well known. Conington there adds Ter. And. 1. 1. 137, Quem quidem ego si sensero ... sed quid opus est verbis? Ov. Her. 12. 207, Quos equidem actutum ... sed quid praedicere poenam Attinet ..

Muttito modo, 'only dare to say one word.' See Note on 1. 1. 227.

23. nequiter, 'poorly.' expedivit, 'turned out,' intransitive, as Prol. 5, where see Note. paene, not a litotes for prorsus, as Ussing says. There is a litotes in nequiter, none in paene: he nearly came off poorly, in that he narrowly escaped having his head broken.

24. verum: resumptive like sed, 5. 1. 58. quod: 'touching the matter you spoke of.' This accusative pendens is very common in the comic writers and in Cicero's Letters. See Roby, vol. 2. § 1749.

25. clanculum, 'on the sly,' a comic adverb: also as preposition, clanculum patres, Ter. Ad. 1. 1. 27. legione, Prol. 133. subrupui, 'I stole this service for you' (subripio, of which the old form was subrupio).

26. ex me primo [ut] prima scires. Although Plautus often omits ut, he, I think, limits this to verbs of commanding, permitting, wishing, and probably the insertion of ut is right. See note on Prol. 12. rem ut gessissem publicam, 'how I had served my country.' Gerere rempublicam is often limited to military conduct. Liv. 2. 64, Et in Volscis respublica egregie gesta, tum ducis tum militum opera.

27. enarravi. The preposition denotes detailed narration; ordine is often joined to enarrare, denoting detail still more clearly.

28. Non facerem, 'I would not have done it.' The imperfect is just as common as the pluperfect subjunctive in the apodosis of a hypothetic sentence referring to past time. This usage seems especially common in colloquial Latin. It follows either another pluperfect or an imperfect in the protasis. Instances of the former: Ter. Ad. 2. 1. 24, Si attigisses ferres infortunium. Hec. 4. 2. 29, Non, si rediisset ei pater veniam daret? Bacch. 4. 3. 29, si hercle unam pecarisses syllabam Fieret corium tam maculosum quamst nutricis pallium. Instances of the latter: Aul. 4. 10. 12, ni relleant non fieret. Aul. 3. 2. 25, ad focum si adesses Non fissile haberes caput. As. 3. 3. 88, Numquam hercle facerem, genua ni tam nequiter fricares. See Sonnenschein in the Classical Review, vol. i. Nos. 5, 8. He finds, he tells me, twenty examples of pluperfect, nineteen of imperfect in apodosis in Plautus.

palpo, 'with a pat' or gentle stroke. Palpo percutis Merc. 1. 2. 42. Pseud. 4. 1. 35, mi obtrudere non potes palpum.

29. persentiscat, 'find it out,' used by Terence, Heaut. 4. 5. 21, 5. 1. 43, in this same sense, of 'getting wind' of a thing, sought to be kept secret, 'smelling a rat.'

30. praevertere and praeverti are much used by Plautus, of attending to one thing in preference to another; 'that I regarded my wife before my country.' It is used with an accusative and an ablative with prae here; more commonly with acc. and dat., as Pseud. 1. 3. 59, pietatem amori praevertere, and in this construction it is used by Cicero and Livy. It is used also with the dative only, Merc. 2. 3. 40, mandatae rei; Pers. 5. 2. 20, praeverti litibus, a construction which is also classical. It is also used with the simple accusative, as infra,

3. 2. 39, id te serio prævortier, and this usage again appears in the best authors. It is also used with adverbs, as Hor. Sat. 1. 3. 38, Illuc prævortamur, amatorem quod amicae Turpia decipiunt caecum vitia. Other usages are 'to pre-occupy,' 'to seize before another,' as prævorto poculum, Mil. 3. 1. 59; and 'to outstrip,' as ventos, Virg. Aen. 7. 807.

31. ex, 'owing to,' as ex amore, 43 infra. concinnas, 'you render,' 'make.' This verb, which properly meant 'to put neatly together' (concinnus 'neat'), is used in the old writers in various ways. When used with adjectives or participles, as here, it means to put in a certain state. Capt. 3. 4. 69, me insanum concinnat verbis suis; Id. 4. 2. 38, Tum lanii autem, qui concinnant liberis orbas oves; Stich. 2. 1. 13, tranquillam concinna viam. We should, I think, write Naevis, ap. Non. 90. 27, thus:—

Transit Melitám Romanus exércitus, insulam integram Urit populátur; vástam rem hóstium concínnat.

See Wordsworth, Frag. and Spec., p. 294. In the last line, Urit, populatur, vastat: rem hostium concinnat is usually read with the MSS., and concinnat is translated, 'makes a clean sweep of'; but there is no instance of the word being so used: whereas concinnare vastam = vastare is, as we see, the regular construction. With the simple accusative concinnare means 'to arrange,' as c. struices, 'to set out piles of eatables,' Merc. 1. 1. 26; c. lutum, 'get ready mortar,' Rud. 1. 2. 8; c. aream, 'get ready a fowling floor,' Asin. 1. 3. 64.

32. corrumpere. Merc. 3. 1. 3, oculos corrumpis tales, 'you are spoiling those beautiful eyes' crying. Ov. Am. 3. 6. 57, Quid fles et madidos lacrimis corrumpis ocellos?

Id 'actutum' diu est. Ussing quotes Most. 331, Iam revortar. PH. Diust 'iam' id mihi. Cf. Prop. 2. 22. 14, Quod quaeris 'quare' non habet ullus amor, 'Love has no "why."' Ter. And. 2. 1. 14, Interea fiet aliquid spero. BY. Id 'aliquid' nihil est. Ad. 3. 2. 26, quid istuc 'prorsus' ergost?

33. sentio, ironical, 'so I perceive.'

35. tempus it, 'the time is getting on.' Cf. Ov. Am. 1. 6. 24, Tempora noctis eunt: excute poste seram; Pseud. 1. 3. 12, It dies: ego mihi cesso; Merc. 5. 2. 32, sol abit; Catull. 61. 84, Sed moraris: abit dies. These passages show that ire and abire were used of time rapidly passing by; and there being an omission of the verb after tempus, it may be as properly filled up by it as by est: indeed more properly, for tempus est wants an infinitive expressed. Pers. 4. 7. 14 is no exception: Quid, si admonēam? VIR. Tempus est, for there an infinitive is to be supplied out of admonēam. It = eit is long in Plautus.

36. illi = illic, an alternative form.

38. Facis, ut alias res soles. The gift at once puts Alcumenā in a good humour.

39. ecastor, 'so help me Castor,' a woman's oath. We are told by Gellius that women never said mehercule nor men ecastor. Passages where the MSS. put ecastor in the mouth of a man, as Asin. 5. 2. 90; Cas. 5. 4. 13, have been, or should be, changed. condignum: always used by Plautus in the sense of congruens, conveniens: 'a gift which is worthy of the giver.' He is especially fond of the adverb condigne: condigne te, Cas. 1. 43; condigne ut mos est meretricius, 'quite in keeping with,' Men. 5. 5. 8. Here condignum is equal to tale. Condignus is generally used in disparaging comparisons, but this passage shows that that was not so always.

43. admodum quam. Ussing quotes Gell. 19. 9. 10, Voce admodum quam suavi. Quam is used as an intensive particle both by itself and joined with other words denoting excess: admodum, per, nimium. The idiom is thought by some to be derived from an ellipse denoting surprise, which is sometimes supplied both in Greek and Latin, as in such phrases as θαυμάσιον ὅσον, θαυμαστόν ὥς, mirum quam, immane quantum.

44. Numquid vis. The common formula of farewell: 'have you any commands.' Hor. Sat. 1. 9. 6, Numquid vis occupo, wanting to get rid of the bore. The formula, although polite, often laid open the door to a very rude reply. Ter. Ad. 3. 3. 78, Sy. Num quid vis? DE. Mentem vobis meliorem dari. Men. 2. 2. 53, Numquid vis? ME. Ut eas maxumam in malam crucem. Here a reply of an unexpected sort is made. tamen: as Ussing remarks, tamen in this sense often occupies the last word of the sentence. He quotes Capt. 1. 2. 84; Epid. 3. 3. 45; 3. 4. 97; Mil. 3. 2. 51; 4. 7. 31; Poen. 5. 2. 124. In this respect, as well as in its force, it resembles ἀλλ' ὁμως. The construction is ut quom absim me ames tuam, absentem, tamen (me ames). Virg. Aen. 4. 329, qui te tamen ore referret; where tamen refers to absentem mentally understood.

45. lucescit hoc iam. The same phrase is used Ter. Heaut. 3. 1. 1. Cf. Curc. 1. 3. 26, Hoc quidem edepol haud multo post luce lucebit; Mil. 2. 2. 63, lucet hoc inquam. The pronoun hoc in this phrase seems to have combined with the verb to express the idea of present daylight. The verb, though hoc is technically the nominative to it, does not lose its impersonality, nor is caelum to be understood with hoc, although hoc is of course used δεικτικῶς.

46. etiam, 'yes'. Plaut. Most. 4. 3. 7, Numquid processit ad ferum hodie novi? SI. Etiam. Cic. Acad. 4. 32, Aut 'etiam' aut 'non' respondeat. So in mental reminders, Cic. Att. 7. 3. 12, Ecquid superest? Etiam, 'Oh yes!' Licet, 'very well', 'all right,' a common Plautine formula. See Rud. 4. 6. 8 seqq., quoted by Tyrrell on Mil. 2. 6. 56.

47. prius tua opinione hic adero: bonum animum Alcumena, habe. I have inserted Alcumena with my eyes open. It is a law that neither an Iambic trimeter nor a trochaic tetrameter may end with two Iambic words, or with an Iambic word preceded by a Cretic. See on Prol. 46 supra. The object of this was evidently, as Ritschl has stated in his preface, to avoid strongly placing the accent in two words consecutively on the last syllable. The verbal accent never stood on the last syllable in Latin. In writing metre it was, however, obviously impossible to avoid this, but in some measure to alleviate it, when the last word was an Iambus, it was provided that the word before should not be one, nor should be a Cretic. But I hold against Luchs that this did not apply to words which became Iambic or Cretic words by elision; for the obvious reason that the verbal accent and the metrical accent there coincide. Therefore there is no objections to such lines as these: Ter. Heaut. 2. 3. 63:

Ubi dicimus redisse te et rogare uti.

Aul. 2. 4. 16:

Solet ire coctum. Tum trium litterarum homo, testified by all MSS.

48. die, dat., see 237 supra.

49. inlucescat, 'shine upon,' transitive as Bacch. 2. 3. 22, Volicanus Luna Sol Dies di quattuor Scelestiorem nullum inluxere alterum.

luce clara et candida : the only passage in Plautus where lux is feminine : it is masculine in Capt. 5. 4. 11, lucis tuendi : Cist. 2. 1. 49, cum primo luci (so Ter. Ad. 5. 3. 55) ; Aul. 4. 10. 18, luci claro.

50. longior. The termination -or is invariably lengthened in Plautus, when the genitive is -ōris.

51. disparem, 'that I may make an even distribution. Disparare is a Plautine verb ; Rud. Prol. 10, Is nos per gentis alias alia disparat, where it is spoken of Jupiter arranging the positions of the stars. The meaning of the passage, as I have arranged it, is that in order to bring back the hours of dawn and sunset to their proper place, Jupiter is obliged to shorten the day by the time the previous night had been prolonged. The passage is very much disputed. I have little doubt that I am right in changing hac to haec, and in reading disparem ; but I am uncertain as to the rest of the passage. I formerly wrote it thus :—

Atque quanto, nox, fuisti longior, haec proxima
Tanto brevior nox ut fiat faciam, ut aequè disparem, Et die e nocte accedat.

According to this view the passage would mean that he would shorten the next night, to compensate for the inordinate lengthening of the past night. And this sense is much preferable, but it involves the change of dies to nox. It is, however, possible that dies was a correction of a transcriber, who thought dies wanted to contrast with nox.

Mr. Purser suggests placing a full stop at disparem, and reading En ! dies e nocte accedit ! which seems feasible.

ACT II. 1.

Amphitruo, accompanied by Sosia, is on his way from the harbour to his home. He has heard Sosia's strange story of his having been driven away from the house by his double, and expostulates with him.

1. secundum, 'after me.' Stich. 3. 1. 46, Ite hac secundum vos. In these passages it is used adverbially, but often with an acc., 'behind,' 'after,' 'along.' Sulpic. ad Cic. Fam. 4. 12, secundum aurem, of a blow 'behind the ear'; Cic. Att. 3. 12, secundum comitia; Rud. 1. 2. 68, secundum litus, 'along the shore.'

2. quam ob rem. Quam is invariably elided in quam ob rem, and me (or id after quam) or some such word must be inserted.

4. Eccerē, 'look you there.' Eccere or ecere may mean by Ceres, as Festus says (cf. ecastor). Corssen supposed it to be derived from ecce re, 'see here in fact.' Mr. Bury has suggested it is an imperative from a verb eccor. and that ecce was an imperative from ecco. The quantity of the last syllable is against this. It occurs six or seven times in Plautus. tuatim, 'just like you.' Nonius and Charisius explain tuatim to mean two more. This is the only passage where tuatim is found. Nostratim, which Charisius quotes as a parallel form, is not found anywhere.

6. quid est, 'interrogatio indignantis,' Ussing, who refers to 2. 2. 103 infra, and other passages. quomodo has a like force; see 4. 2. 4 infra.

9. loquār. See on Prol. 38.

13. Malum quod tibi di dabunt, 'the gods will punish you for this.' Quod = 'in regard to which matter,' in effect = propter quod. This quod, which is really an accusative of respect or reference, is common in imprecations. Ter. Phorm. 5. 8. 83, malum quod isti di deaque omnes dunt. Pseud. 4. 7. 29, Most. 3. 1. 126. Ussing is wrong when he says malum quod is for malum aliquod, 'some evil.' dabunt: the future is used in imprecations and blessings, as stronger than an optative: cf. As. 3. 3. 33, dabunt di quae velitis vobis. hodie, 1. 1. 244.

14. in manu, 'in your power.' A phrase sometimes used with extreme grace by Plautus, as Trin. 1. 2. 67:

Est atque non est mi in manu, Megaronides:

Quin dicant non est: merito ut ne dicant, id est.

Cf. Ter. Hec. 4. 4. 44, Uxor quid faciat in manu non est mea; Cic. Fam. 14. 2, haec non sunt in nostra manu.

20. tua ex re. Ex seems to mean 'touching,' 'concerning,' 'in respect to,' 'in point of': 'what harm have I done, touching your concerns?' The phrase is the same as the ordinary e re esse, but differently used: e re generally means 'for the advantage of,' as in Ter. Phorm. 5. 7. 76, Non hercle ex re istius me instigasti, but this passage shows it was originally a neutral phrase, and denoted neither harm nor good, merely 'to touch a person nearly.' Ussing says tua ex re here means ex ea ratione qua tuas res gessi, 'what punishment have I deserved from my conduct of your affairs?'

21. etiam, 'actually,' l. 1. 222 supra. ludos facere, with an accusative, is frequent in Plautus = ludificare.

22. merito meo. I have inserted meo, which may easily have dropped out after merito, in preference to adopting non from J, a manuscript which in no case has preserved independently a correct reading, save by conjecture. With the reading in the text si id ita factum est means 'if I have been making fun of you': with non it would mean 'if what I say did not happen.' For merito meo cf. l. 1. 27; Aul. 2. 2. 75; Capt. 5. 2. 18; merito tuo, Asin. 1. 2. 12; 3. 2. 14; 5. 1. 7, etc. The phrase is frequent.

25. ita essem, i.e. ebrius, 'I wish I was.' optas: point will be given to Amphitruo's retort if we remember that optare meant (Reid on Cic. Balb. § 9) to wish for a thing difficult of attainment.

26. tu istic, l. 1. 212 supra.

28. quid hoc sit hominis? 'what am I to make of this fellow?' 'what sort of a fellow may this be?' So infra 2. 2. 137. The use of the potential sit is rare, but cf. neque ulla videtur magis, 5. 1. 8: Hor. Sat. 2. 1. 15; 2. 4. 35; 1. 4. 69; Ep. 1. 4. 8. sit, however, here may be subjunctive, not potential, depending on an expression of wonder understood (miror) quid hoc sit hominis. The form of the phrase hoc hominis increases the expression of perplexity on the part of the speaker. So Ter. Eun. 3. 4. 8, Quid hoc hominis, quid hoc ornatist? Ibid. 5. 1. 17, Quid illuc hominis est? This material or specifying genitive is extremely common in colloquial Latin. Nouns of all genders are joined to hoc and quid. With hoc hominis compare monstrum hominis, Eun. 4. 4. 29; monstrum mulieris, Poen. 1. 2. 61; frustum pueri, Pers. 5. 2.

67 (a bit of a boy); hallex viri, Poen. 5. 5. 31 (a Tom Thumb of a man); flagitium hominis, Men. 3. 2. 24; scelus viri, Curc. 5. 2. 16. Ussing has probably long ere this abandoned his conjecture.

37. proinde ac: so the MSS. Plautus generally has proinde ut: see on 2. 2. 53.

40. erum. Probably rather pronounced er'm than scanned as a pyrrhic. So Asin. 2. 2. 14, Erum in obsidione linquet inimicum animos auxerit, where LG unnecessarily read eros with Niemeyer: Asin. 2. 4. 79, Quid verbero? Ain tu furcifer? erum me fugitare censes? Asin. 3. 3. 111, Perii hercle vero: si quidemst decorum erum vehere servom | Inscende. In all these passages er'm should be pronounced, and in several others. See note on prosperare, 1. 2. 1. delirantibus: Plautus is rather fond of this word. The derivation from lira, a ridge or furrow, is certainly right, but no doubt the idea that it represented ληρεῖν gave it its extensive use.

42. ultro, 'to boot.' fieri in Plautus, when it stands at the end of an Iambic or Trochaic line; also in Bacchiac metre as above, vs. 17; elsewhere fieri, as usual, 48 infra. So fierem.

47. argumentis puta. 'discuss with arguments'; so putare is used in the phrase putare rationes, to go over accounts. disputare would be the regular word.

49. illi = illic.

50. hilo mirum magis, 'one jot more wonderful.' Lucret. 5. 1409, Et numerum servare recens didicere, neque hilo Maiorem interea capiunt dulcedinis fructum. The passages referred to in Crit. Note are Truc. Neque mea quidem opera umquam hilo minus propere quam potest peribit. There can be no doubt that Lambinus was right there in reading hilo minus for nihili omnibus. Asin. Mea quidem hercle opera hilo liber numquam fiet ocius, where the MSS. omit hilo.

54. sedimus. I doubt this word: first, because the perfect tense is rare with dum; secondly, because sedimus, though a proper word to denote a siege, is a highly improper word to denote a pitched battle: if sound it means 'while we were encamped'; but cernimus, 'while we were fighting,' seems more probable.

56. lac lactis. Another proverb with the same import is given Men. 5. 9. 30, Neque aqua aquae neque lactest lacti, crede mihi, usquam similis. Ritschl holds that Plautus and Terence only used the genitive with similis, Opusc. 2. 570, 579. He changes the mss. wherever they exhibit the dative; and as in most cases the letter s follows lacti, the change to lactis is not violent, while the omission of s in these passages might have supplied a false example, inducing copyists to allow the dative in other passages. Ussing adheres to the mss. I follow Ritschl with hesitation. lac: the full form of lac is lacte, which appears several times in Plautus.

57. ut, 'when,' 'after that.'

58. illo. thither. Cf. quo. illoc (later illuc) is a lengthened form of illo: so hoc is old Latin for huc.

60. mala manu. Amphitruo says some wizard has bewitched Sosia.

61. obtusus, 'mauled.' Obtusus is regularly used of a person whose face has been mauled in a fight. Cas. 5. 1. 9, obtusio ore senem. Lucil. 1099, optuso ore pugil. In Propert. 3. 16. 9—

Peccaram semel et totum sum portus in annum,

In me mansuetas non habet illa manus.

portus, the reading of the best ms., is perhaps derived from optus, written by mistake for optusus.

65. Mihi quidem uno te plus etiam est quam volo. 'I have one more slave than I wish in having you.' uno and te are probably in apposition. uno is the ablative of difference.

68. faciam ut, used here in the sense of faxim supra, 'I'll warrant you'll find.'

72. licitum est. Plautus is rather fond of this form for licit; so libitum est.

75. quid ais, 'I say,' 1. 1. 210 supra.

76. Ibi forte istum si vidisses. This expression probably depends on mirabar understood, 'I was wondering if you had seen some Sosia in your sleep.' Cf. Ter. And. 1. 2. 4, mirabar hoc si sic abiret. ibi, 'and then,' much the same as in somnis; 1. 1. 94, ibi nostris animus adlatus est; 2. 2. 106.

Ubi primum ted ibi sensisti mulier impliciscier? Fortasse governs an accusative and infinitive in Plautus. Hence Ussing's conjecture. He defends it by Asin. 37, Ubi fit polenta te fortasse dicere; Epid. 293, Ad quadraginta fortasse eam posse emi minimo minis; Merc. 770, Fortasse te illum mirari coquam. In these passages the accusative is expressed. It is understood in Poen. 1007, Fortasse medicos nos esse arbitrarier. This is a good conjecture, but the text is probably sound. See on vs. 28 supra.

77. somniculose, the second syllable is long, as in meticulosus, pediculosus, febriculosus. Cf. Mart. 3. 58, Somniculosos ille porrigit glires, a scazon, 'sleepy dormice.'

80. quis homo: 1. 1. 155 supra.

81. blatis = blateras, 'prate.' The dictionaries make the present blatio, but only the 2nd sing. is found. It occurs three times in Plautus, Curc. 3. 8. 2, Epid. 3. 1. 13, and it is uncertain whether the present is blato or blatio. The form blato, blatas is given in glossaries.

83. istuc ... exquisito est opus: 1. 3. 7, supra.

84-87. Ussing notices the blemishes in these verses, and condemns them as spurious. He says (1) that Amphitruo is not, in his present state of mind, likely to trouble himself about giving a command about his property on the ship. (2) That he would not, in the same breath, tell Sosia to follow him, and to see to landing the moveables; (3) that Sosia had drunk no wine, and the last line but one implies he had. (4) That the suspected verses abound with faults, et numerorum et orationis vitiis abundant. The last statement is exaggerated, but the three first arguments will incline the reader to agree with Ussing.

84. iam precedes imperari in the mss., but transpositions of pairs of words are very common in the Plautine codices.

85. compareant. The general use of comparere is 'to be forthcoming.' Here the meaning must be 'that there may be something to show for your commands.'

86. I would read interbibi for ebibi to cure the hiatus. Cf. Aul. 3. 6. 22, Quae mi interbibere sola si vino scatat Corinthiensem fontem Pirenem potest. simitu = simul, very common in Plautus. The medial syllable was formerly supposed to be short, and Bothe and Weise altered all the passages which this theory did not suit. Kampmann was the first to demonstrate the true quantity in modern times. So a preconceived notion caused Bothe to spoil Men. 3. 1. 26, Tantas struices concinnat patinarias, by placing Et before it. A more glaring instance still is the view commonly held that dīērectus is a trisyllable, involving numerous and sometimes large alterations of five or six out of thirteen passages, instead of a trivial alteration of only one, Trin. 2. 4. 56, where hinc should be omitted. As to the form simitur, proposed by Ritschl, it is only known from one or two inscriptions, probably centuries later than Plautus (Orelli 2863, Mommsen Neap. 423), and there is no trace of simitur in any ancient writer.

ACT II. 2.

Alcumena, in front of her house, laments her supposed husband's departure. To her enter Amphitruo and Sosia. She is surprised by Amphitruo's sudden return: he is amazed by her cold reception, and still more by her story. He announces his intention of divorcing her: but first he determines to seek out Naucrates, his fellow passenger, a relation of Alcumena, and confront his wife with his denial of her story.

1. Satin = nonne, as often. res voluptatum = voluptates, a periphrastic expression to which I know no exact parallel in Latin. It is probably, as Muretus says, a translation of τὸ χρῆμα τῶν ἡδονῶν. Cf. Arist. Nub. 1, ὦ Ζεῦ βασιλεῦ τὸ χρῆμα τῶν νυκτῶν ὅσον. Ussing takes parva res = exigua pars, 'what a small share of pleasures there is in life.'

2. praequam, 'compared with': generally joined with relatives. Aul. 3. 5. 33, Sed hoc etiam pulcrumst praequam sumptus ubi petunt. Also without relatives, Most. 4. 2. 65, Nihil hoc quidemst Triginta minae praequam alios dapsilis sumptus facit. Its use is much the same as of praeut, 1. 1. 220 supra.

ita quoique comparatumst. This colon is in the metre called Ionic ἀνακλώμενος; one of the most favourite variations of Ionic metre in both Greek and Latin: it consists of a third Paeon — — — followed by a second Epitrite -- — —. Cf. for instance Aesch. Prom. 397 seqq. (e.g. νοτίους ἔτεγξα παγὰς), Eur. Bacch. 519 seqq. (e.g. σὺ δέ μ' ὦ μάκαιρα Δίρκα), Ar. Ran. 344 seqq. (e.g. φλογὶ φέγγεται δὲ λείμων). This was a favourite metre with Varro; and Catullus wrote the whole Attis in what is practically the same metre, viz. the Galliambic. homōnum. This form, necessary here to complete the Bacchius, is testified by Priscian, 683, vetustissimi ... etiam homo homonis declina-verunt. He cites Ennius (183 Mueller):

Volturus in spinis miserum mandebat homonem, in which passage the mss. of Charisius give hominem. This declension will be found to remedy many passages in Plautus, and Leo appears quite right in introducing it here. Brix has often introduced it in the plays edited by him. The only passage in Ribbeck's edition of the comic fragments where it appears is in Novius, Togularia (88 Ribb.):—

Abíte, deturbáte saxo, homónum quisquilíae! Quid est?

where the mss. of Festus give homo non. This, as well as the scansion, points to Ribbeck's conjecture.

3. ita dis est placitum mss., which Spengel and Brix retain, scanning itā: ita divis est placitum, Leo, who with Mueller rejects that scansion. I hope the reader will not expect me to decide finally points like these where excellent scholars differ. By reading divis I have ranged myself on Mueller's side, who holds that all the passages where the mss. exhibit itā are false readings. They are not few; a list is given in Mueller's Plant. Prol. p. 14. In all of these, however, where ita is an Iambus, the text is probably corrupt, and is capable of easy emendation; for instance, no one would think of quoting Asin. 1. 1. 3 to support itā: Ita te obtestor per senectutem tuam, where ted has long since been introduced. The only passage where ita probably was written as an Iambus is Cist. Arg. 10:—

Itāque lege et rite civem cognitam, but written, not by Plautus, but by the author of an Argument. who, misled by false readings, thought he was justified in making Plautus write itā. Brix on Capt. 3. 2. 3 allows itā in Bacchiac and Cretic metres, but Mueller shows there is no ground for this distinction. For divi cf. 5. 1. 69: Aul. 1. 1. 11.

5. domo: οἰκοθεν, 'of myself,' a common phrase; domi habere is 'to have about one,' 'of one's own.' The ablative is probably right, of the source. domo petes is found in Cic. Fam. 7. 25: domo quaerendum remedium. Id. Cluent. 9. 27. See Tyrrell's note on Mil. 2. 2. 39.

7. dudum hinc ante lucem. Cf. vs. 67 infra, Nam dudum ante lucem et istunc et te vidi; 2. 1. 55, Nam ut dudum ante lucem a portu me praemisisti domum. Poen. 1. 2. 104, iam dudum ante lucem ad aedem Veneris venimus.

8. abest quem ego. quem is not elided, but shortened before e, the last syllable of a bacchius being in arsis, as well as the second, and quēm ē are = the last syllable of the bacchius resolved.

10. quom. The regular Plautine particle after verbs of congratulation, praise, and the reverse, Men. 5. 9. 87, Quom tu es liber, gaudeo, Messenio; Capt. 1. 2. 48. Laudo malum quom amici tuom ducis malum. Ussing quotes Cic. Fam. 9. 14. 3, gratulator tibi cum tantum vales; Id. Mil. 36. 99, Te quidem, cum isto animo es, satis laudare non possum. He truly remarks, however, that as hoc precedes, we might rather expect quod for quom here; but he quotes the parallel Bacch. 334, Istuc sapienter saltem fecit filius, Quom diviti homini id aurum servandum dedit; and Ter. Phorm. 967, hoc fretus quom e medio excessit. So in Greek ὅτε is used, Arist. Ach. 400, ὦ τρισμακάρι' Εὐριπίδῃ "Ὅθ' ὁ δοῦλος οὕτως σοφῶς ὑποκρίνεται; and Ran. 20, Blaydes has adopted my change of ὅτι to ὅτε, ὦ τρισκακοδαίμων ἄρ' ὁ τράχηλος οὕτως ὅτε θλίβεται μὲν τὸ δὲ γέλοιον οὐκ ἐρεῖ. perduellis: here four syllables. See note 1. 1. 35.

11. vicit. This termination was originally long, and is repeatedly found so in Plautus and Ennius. Brix on Mil. 2. 2. 58 (astitit) quotes many instances. Even in the Augustan age many traces of this appear in the willingness of poets to lengthen, in caesural arsis, the last syllable of a verb ending in -t. Thus the only undoubted lengthening in caesural arsis in Propertius is 4. 1. 17, Nulli cura fuit externos quaerere divos. See my Note on Hor. Sat. 1. 9. 21.

14. abitus, 'his goings away.' Alcumena speaks generally.

15. victor clueat, 'be hailed conqueror.' Clueo is properly the same word as κλύω, but whether it was directly adopted from the Greek, or only a sister word, I do not know. If adopted, it was adopted very early, as its derivatives cliens and inclitus show. The idiom in which κλύειν, ἀκούειν—clueo, audio—meant ‘to hear oneself called,’ ‘to be called,’ was a favourite one in both Greek and Latin. Aesch. Prom. 868, κλύειν ἀναλκίς μάλλον ἢ μαιφόρος. Soph. Trach. 414, μῶρος δ’ ἢ πάλαι κλύων σέθεν. Soph. Oed. Col. 988, ἐν τοῖσδ’ ἀκούσομαι κακός. Dem. 241. 13, νῦν κόλακες καὶ θεοῖς ἐχθροὶ ἀκούουσι; Trin. 2. 2. 31, Qui animum vincunt, quam quos animus, semper probiores cluent; Epid. 2. 2. 5, Senati qui columen cluent; Hor. Ep. 1. 7. 7, Rexque paterque audisti coram; cf. Ibid. 1. 16. 17; Sat. 2. 6. 20; Prop. 2. 34. 83, where nothing will persuade me that Propertius did not write Nec minor his audis. Lucretius uses cluere almost = esse, 1. 449, Nam quaecumque cluent, ‘all things which exist, which have a name,’ Munro.

16. praemiorum. In the interval between my printing my Critical Note and penning these lines, the author of this emendation ad plures se penetravit, and it will not be out of place if I here express the deep regret that I feel at the early death of one of the most accurate Plautine scholars in our land.

17. anteit, dissyllable, perhaps written divisim: ante it.

19. patria hac et prognati tutantur, servantur. I have inserted hac. Seyffert’s law that every Bacchiac line must have a pure bacchius in it, does not seem to me capable of proof any more than that an anapaestic dimeter must have one pure anapaest. tutantur, passive. 3. 2. 3 infra. Nonius quotes tuos qui celso terminos tutant from Naevius (20 Ribb.), and Tu mulier tege te et tuta templo Liberi from Pacuvius (298 Ribb.).

22. edepol. It is hardly necessary at this time of day to warn the student against supposing the first syllable of this word to be long. What ede- is derived from is uncertain, it certainly is not from aedem. It is probably the same as e- in ecastor, the first syllable of which is long. I mean ēde- is in ecastor contracted into ē-.

25. There is not sufficient reason for changing the rare inductu to the common ductu. ductu is more general, inductu is 'leading into fight,' 'leading on.' Cf. inducere, 1. 1. 87.

25. coetu, 'engagement,' the only passage where it is used in this sense. Cf. concurritur, Hor. Sat. 1. 1. 7, and our 'joining battle.' Cf. Ter. Phorm. 2. 2. 32, Prima coitios acerruma.

26. certe enim, 'yes, I know for certain.' Enim in old Latin often had an affirmative force, something like nempe, with which enim is etymologically connected. The illative force is latent, but it is going too far, in my opinion, to deny the existence of this illative or causal force in Plautus. Instances of the affirmative use are Plaut. Most. 3. 1. 24, Quid tute tecum? TRA. Nihil enim ('why, nothing'); Cas. 2. 5. 15, Quid tu postea? OL. Negari enim ipsi me concessurum Iovi. Ussing quotes Ter. Eun. 1074, Et lubenter vivis et enim bene lubenter victitas, 'yes and'; Virg. Aen. 84, Quam pius Aeneas tibi, enim tibi, maxima Iuno, Mactat, 'to thee, yes to thee'; Aen. 10. 874, Aeneas agnovit enim laetusque precatur. Cf. Georg. 2. 509, plausus, per cuneos geminatus enim, 'aye, applause redoubled.' See Tyrrell's Note on Mil. 4. 6. 6; Brix on Trin. 3. 2. 79: it is especially used in the phrases at enim, quia enim, non enim, nihil enim, certe enim, enim vero, enim iam. It is, as Brix remarks, often used at the opening of a speech, hence it is called a particula inceptiva by Donatus on Ter. Ad. 2. 1. 14. expectatum: expectatum advenire (προθελὸς ἐλθεῖν). Pacuvius, 232 (Ribb.):—

optato expands the idea of expectatum: this superfluity is a Plautine characteristic. illi: so amicae in next verse and uxori in 22. The dative after the past participle is not very common. In these instances there is an admixture of the ethical dative with the dative of the agent. I mean the construction is between, 'I will return expected by my wife,' and 'I will return expected to the delight of my wife.'

28. hic quidem, to be pronounced, perhaps written, hiquidem, 1. 1. 263. illic. The mss. give ille, but the trochaic division of a dactyl, illē rē, is not legitimate except at the beginning of a verse, while it is not usual in Plautus to make ille a pyrrhic unless a short monosyllable preceding together with the first syllable of ille forms either the arsis or thesis of a foot. Cf. án ille in the next verse, where án ill- forms the arsis. See Mueller, Plaut. Prol. p. 281. He prefers ille huc. But illic is often altered to ille in Plautine MSS., and it is simpler to read it here.

29. aibat. Plautus uses both the older dissyllabic form, and the trisyllabic aiebat. The fact that the 2nd person sing. is aís (Men. 3. 2. 22) shows that aio was of the 4th conjugation.

32. qua gratia = cuius rei gratia, qua de causa. Ussing.

34. in mentemst, l. 1. 26 supra. The copyists here changed est to venit, forgetting the idiom, thus making the verse too long. Cf. 78 infra, where in mentem has been changed to in mente.

36. quom abeo. The historical present with quom is a usage of colloquial Latin. Ussing quotes, with other passages, the following: Men. Prol. 29, Tarenti ludi forte erant quom illuc venit; Men. 5. 9. 56, Quot eras annos natus tum, quom te pater a patria archit; Ibid. 5. 9. 76, Hunc censebat te esse, credo, quom vocat te ad prandium. So Hor. Sat. 2. 3. 61, cum Ilionam edormit; Ibid. 277, Marius cum praecipitat se Cerritus fuit?

37. Quid tibist? 'what's the matter?' Exactly the French 'qu'avez-vous?' The phrase is a stock one. Ad aquam praebendam, for washing the newly born infant and mother. Ter. Andr. 3. 2. 3, Nunc primum jac ista ut lavet. Drawing water from a deep well is hard labour. commodum, 'just in time,' 'exactly.' Cic. Att. 13. 9, Commodum discesseras heri cum Trebatius venit. Cf. Cas. 3. 4. 3; Stich. 2. 2. 41; Trin. 5. 2. 12.

38. rationem ductare, 'are reckoning.' Ductare rationem is not found elsewhere, but ducere rationem is not uncommon. Lucil. 736 (Lach.), Age nunc summam sumptus duc; Cic. Att. 8. 11. ad Pomp. ad fin. duxi meam rationem. I do not understand Ussing when he says putare is nearer the MSS. reading than ductare.

39. Scin quam bono animo sim. Scin quam, scin quomodo, are often used in threatening replies. See on l. 1. 200 supra. The indicative usually follows scin quam, but Ussing quotes Bacch. 4. 2. 12, for the subjunctive, at scin quam iracundus siem? situlam, a large bucket for drawing water.

40. numquam edepol tu mihi divini creduis post hunc diem, 'never trust me after this day in any sacred matter.' Credere is used with a genitive of specification, 'in the matter.' Cf. Asin. 2. 4. 53, quod omnium rerum ipse semper credit; Bacch. 3. 4. 5, nam mihi divini numquam quisquam creduat; Truc. 307, numquam edepol mihi Quisquam homo mortalis posthac duarum rerum credit. The fuller phrase in which quicquam is expressed is found in Asin. 5. 2. 4, Neque divini neque mi humani posthac quicquam adcreduas, Artemona, si huius rei me mendacem inveneris, where the construction of huius rei with mendacem is really the same. Poen. 2. 20, Quid ei divini aut humani aequomst credere? Hence it is that the copyist has introduced quicquam here. divini: Ussing says the meaning is 'do not believe me when I swear by the gods.' Perhaps it is rather to be explained thus: divini et humani was a formula including all matters, sacred and profane, and was the original formula; then when there was not room to express both, divini was selected as apparently the more solemn of two, the meaning being as vague to the Romans as to the reader. creduis: subj. pres. from credo: the termination -duis is from the old form duo for do which is seen in interduo, Capt. 3. 5. 36: concreduo, Aul. 3. 6. 49, and in its own subjunctive duim. Plautus also uses the form creduam, -as, -at, and accreduas. So perduis, infra, 215, and perduint, very common in the phrase di te perduint.

41. occepso, i.e. occepero, a form which occurs vs. 92 infra, and may be the true reading here. animam omnem intertraxero, 'draw the very life out of the well,' animam put comically for aquam. intertraxero: cf. interbibere, to 'drink dry'; see 2. 1. 86 supra, and cf. the forms interficio, interimo, interimentum.

42. allegabo, 'appoint.' Ussing quotes Stich. 5. 3. 8, Ceterum curando id allegavi. It is strange that Lambinus preferred alligabo, 'tie to.'

44. speratam suam, 'his darling.' Nonius, p. 175, says that speratum meant sponsum, and quotes from Afranius, 174 (Ribb.), speratam non odi (? novi) tuam, and 175 (Ribb.), curre, nuntia venire et mecum meam speratam adducere, as Ribbeck reads. Hence speratam not only declares how Amphitruo longed to see his wife, but conveys a tender reminiscence of days of courtship. Cf. Ov. Her. 21. 59: speratae cura puellae.

45. unam, 'of all others': unus like εἷς is often joined with superlatives in this sense. Most. 4. 3. 44, unus istic servos est sacerrimus. Capt. 2. 2. 28: Quod genus illist unum pollens atque honoratissimum. diudicat, the prefix of course denotes discrimination.

46. quamque adeo, 'yes and whom.' Adeo in Plautus often denotes 'further,' Stich. 1. 1. 12, patrem tuum meumque adeo, 'and mine too.' Literally, adeo means 'to that.' This may mean 'up to that,' and the senses 'until' and 'so very' come under this head. adeo usque dum, or adeo dum, means 'until,' as 1. 2. 10; adeo with adjectives 'to that degree,' as adeo parcum, 'so very stingy,' Aul. 2. 4. 36. But it is from the sense 'in addition to that' that most of the idiomatic Plautine usages of adeo are derived. Atque adeo is both intensive, 'what's more,' as Pseud. 1. 2. 60, atque adeo ut frumento adfluam, 'yes, that I should overflow with corn,' and corrective, as Cas. 2. 6. 14, CL. Tibi daretur illa? St. Mihi enim. Ah! non id volui dicere. Dum mihi volui, huic dixi—atque adeo— ('or rather') dum mihi cupio—perperam Iamdudum hercle fabulor. This meaning 'or rather' comes naturally out of the sense of 'what's more'; it occurs several times in Cicero, Att. 1. 17. 9, princeps atque adeo secundus, where see Tyrrell's note. Verr. 3. 27, Si damnatus eris atque adeo cum damnatus eris.

47. haud vidi magis expectatum. In this ironical phrase the adjective or participle is generally omitted. Ussing quotes Capt. 555, At etiam te suum sodalem esse aibat. TY. Haud vidi magis (sc. sodalem). Merc. 714, Haeres. LY. Haud vidi magis (sc. haerentem); Poen. 141, Ignoscere id te mihi aequomst. MI. Haud vidi magis (sc. aequom). Hence all the modern editors with one consent punctuate at magis, wrongly, I think. We occasionally find an elliptical colloquial phrase fully expressed. Thus the phrase, sed scin quomodo, generally written in a curtailed form, is fully written Aul. 1. 1. 8, At scin quomodo tibi res se habet. οὐ μὴ in Greek takes the aorist subjunctive, and δεινόν ἐστι is understood; but we find the ellipse for once filled up, Plat. Apol. 16, οὐδὲν δὲ δεινὸν μὴ ἐν ἐμοὶ στῆν. Such passages teach us not to be too hasty in cutting all passages where an idiom is found to one pattern, and I have no doubt, if vs. 48 is sound, that magis expectatum are to be joined together. Ussing ejects vs. 48 altogether.

48. quiquam. See Crit. Note.

49. quom, 2. 2. 10 supra. pulcre plenam, Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, Act 1. Sc. 1, "She is spread of late into a goodly bulk, good time encounter her."

50. deridiculi gratia, 'to make fun of me.' Pseud. 4. 5. 7, Ego periurare mavellem me milies Quam mi illum verba per deridiculum dare.

51. dudum, 'just now,' 'a short while ago.'

53. proinde quasi, 'just as if.' Proinde is much more common than perinde in this sense in Plautus. It is always a dissyllable in Plautus, and proin, which is a shortened form, is always a monosyllable. He most commonly joins it with ut: twice with quasi, here, and Poen. 4. 2. 23: once with quam, Truc. 2. 3. 3: twice according to the Palatine MSS. with ac, Trin. 3. 2. 33, and 2. 1. 37 supra, where see note. quasi multo post videris, lit. 'as though you had seen me long after,' i.e. as though it were long since you had seen me.

57. revortimini. The first syllable is lengthened. Cf. rēclūsit, Cart. 4. 4; rēcidit, Poen. 5. 6. 32; perhaps rēveniunt, 1. 1. 33 supra. This archaic lengthening was preserved in the best ages in the case of recido and reduco, which were perhaps written (by the later authors) reccido and redduco, a doubling often preserved in the mss. See Munro on Lucretius, 1. 228, who, when he says 'Plautus and Terence have always redduco,' only means that the first syllable is always long 'where the verse shows the quantity'; the mss. never in Plautus give reddl-, nor of Terence save that in one passage the Bembine had originally reddl- in the perfect, but a d is erased. In Ter. Ad. 4. 3. 11, the first syllable of relevo is lengthened, and the mss. show no trace of a double l, though Bentley read rellevaris, nor do they in Ter. Phorm. Prol. 21, relatum, though Donatus apparently read rellatum. rē- is for red-, which is preserved before vowels as in redeo, etc.

58. auspiciū commoratumst. Cf. Liv. 8. 30, In Samnium incertis itum auspiciis est: ... Papirius dictator ... cum ad auspiciū repetendum Romam proficisceretur. commoratumst, rarely transitive. Cf. Pseud. 4. 7. 31, Me nunc commoror.

continet, 'is it bad weather that keeps you back?' The present is here right, the perfect would be wrong, because, of course, if the bad weather was not now continuing, they would have started. See Note on abstinei, 3. 2. 45 infra. continet, 'keeps at home.' Virg. Georg. 1. 259, Frigidus agricolam si quando continet imber.

60. quam dudum, 'how long ago.' Ussing quotes Trin. 3. 1. 4, Quam dudum istuc aut ubi actumst? St. Ilico, hic ante ostium. Ter. Eun. 4. 4. 30, Quando? Do. Hodie. Ph. Quam dudum? Do. Modo. temptas = captas, 'trying to catch me in my words.' "Why tempt ye me, ye hypocrites," Matt. 22. 19, where 'tempt' comes from temptatis, the vulgate translation of πειράζετε. iam dudum: Amphitruo having asked quam dudum, Alcumena replies iam dudum, the whole emphasis of her reply being thus evidently thrown on iam, 'but now, a while ago.' Amphitruo takes her up as if she used iam dudum in its ordinary sense of 'long since,' and asked how can she say 'long since' and modo, 'just now,' in the same breath. This passage is discussed at great length by Langen, pp. 33-43.

62. te ut deludam contra lusorem meum. This depends on censeo: 'do you think it proper that I should try to fool you in return?' The best construction of censere is with ut. There should be a question stop at abieris. deliramenta, 'ravings.' Cf. Men. 5. 5. 21, and 2. 2. 96 supra.

65. dum edormiscat unum somnum, 'till she sleeps just one sleep.' Unum is used to justify paulisper. The general use of edormiscere, edormire, is not to sleep out a sleep, but to sleep off the effects of wine. Rud. 2. 7. 28, Abeo hinc ut edormiscam hanc crapulam; Ter. Ad. 5. 2. 11, edormiscam hoc villi, 'sleep off this drop of wine'; Cic. Phil. 2. 12, Edormi, inquam, crapulam et exhalat. Acad. 2. 17. 48, Cumque edormiverunt, illa visa quam levia fuerint, intelligunt. But Horace uses edormire, of sleeping through a part in a play; Sat. 2. 3. 61, Cum Ilionam edormit.

Quaene vigilans somniat? The enclitic particle ne is often used in Latin, especially old Latin, thus, to give a reason for a statement expressed, or a thought implied. Priscian calls this an affirmative (particula confirmativa, 2. 101. 24, Keil), but he means, I think, rather that it is a strengthening than an affirmative particle. Mr. Minton Warren's paper in The American Journal of Philology (2. 5) is well known ; he regards this ne as an affirmative particle, originally the same as the interrogative ne, but specialized as an affirmative in this case.

There are three chief usages of this ne, (1) Joined to a relative giving a reason for a previous assertion controverted, or imagined to be controverted. In this case it is usually easy to trace the interrogative sense ; (2) Iterating or echoing a previous interrogative ne ; (3) Simply emphasising a statement, in which case it is generally joined to pronouns. In the two last cases the interrogative sense has quite disappeared. The following instances of (1) are cited by Üssing :—Mil. 13, Quemne ego serrari in campis ; Trin. 358, Quin (i.e. Quine) comedit quod fuit, quod non fuit ; Epid. 708, Quamne hodie per urbem uterque sumus defessi quaerere ; Cist. 481, quaene infitias eat ; Curc. 700, Quodne promisti ; Rud. 1019, Quemne ego excepi in mari ; Ib. 272, Quaene eiectae e mari simus ; Ter. Phorm. 923, Quodne ego discripsi porro illis quibus debui ; Catull. 64. 180, An patris auxilium sperem ? Quemne ipsa reliqui Respersum iuvenem fraterna caede secuta ? Coniugis an filo consoler memet amore ? Quine fugit. See Ellis on this passage. Cf. also Hor. Sat. 1. 10. 21, O seri studiorum ! quine putetis difficile et mirum, Rhodio quod Pitholeonti contigit ? It will be seen that quine takes either indicative or subjunctive, and so does qui when used alone in this sense. Instances of (2), where nē in a reply echoes a previous interrogation, are, Trin. 634, Egone ? LE. Tunc ('I forsooth ?' 'You forsooth'—Warren) ; Most. 3. 1. 62, Reddeturne igitur faenus ? TR. Reddeturne abi (the second ne being restored by Leo in keeping with Warren's view). Pers. 220, Itanest ? Itanest. For instances of (3), where a statement is simply emphasised see Tyrell's Miles, ed. III., 2. 3. 38, hocne miles si sciat. 2. 6. 85, egone si post hunc diem multivero. See more in Sonnenschein's Note on Most. 2. 2. 76.

69. detulit, probably used with reference to the idea of a ship being brought into harbour. Cf. κατελθεῖν, κατάγεσθαι.

70. huic (or huiic) is here a spondee.

71. velis ... facies. For this sequence of subjunctive in protasis, indicative in apodosis, see note on l. 1. 296 supra. Langen, pp. 43-54, discusses this consecution at great length. velis: to be pronounced either v'lis or vel's. For this synaloepha of the vowel either before or after l compare the ordinary scansion of voluptas and Philippi, which must either be pronounced v'luptas or Ph'ilippi, or vóluptas and Philippi: if the latter it was because the speaker felt that he could if he chose slur the l. Cf. Incert. Frag. ap. Quintil. 9. 3. 57 (Ribb. i. p. 249, ed. 2), Ex Tantalo ortus Pelops ex Pelope autem satus, where Pelops must be pronounced P'lops or Pel'ps. So malum, 2. 2. 89 infra, is m'lum or mal'm. See remarks on erum, 2. 14. 1: on prosperare, 1. 2. 1.

Bacchae bacchanti, 'a raving Maenad.' There are many allusions in Plautus to the Bacchae. Orgiastic meetings in celebration of the rites of Bacchus, in imitation of those supposed to be practised by his Greek devotees, and perhaps assimilated to the worship of the great mother, Cybele, seem to have been much in vogue throughout Italy at the end of the third century before Christ. Owing to the licentious and horrid practices which went on at these orgies the Bacchanalia throughout Italy were suppressed by decree of the senate B.C. 186, Livy, 39, 8-16. This S. C. de Bacchanalibus, one copy of which was fortunately found in 1640 at Tirioli, a village in the south of Italy, is well known as one of the most important monuments of early Latin we possess: Wordsworth, Frag. and Spec. p. 172, p. 416 seqq. We find allusions to these Bacchae in five plays of Plautus only: here, and Aul. 3. 1. 3; Bacch. 3. 14; 1. 1. 19; Cas. 5. 4. 10, 11; Mil. 4. 2. 25; 3. 2. 44. Probably all these plays were written not long before the suppression of the Bacchae, for in the few political or personal allusions made by Plautus it is always some condemned person or thing that is attacked. Such are the allusions to the imprisonment of the poet Naevius, Mil. 2. 2. 57: to the bad Latin of the Praenestines—Truc. 3. 2. 23, Ut Praenestinis conia est ciconia; Trin. 3. 1. 8, 'tam modo' inquit Praenestinus—and their boastfulness, Bacch. 28: these allusions to the Praenestines being permitted, as Mommsen suggests, on account of some dissensions between Praeneste and Rome.

73. una resolvas plaga, 'you may pay her off at the cost of one blow,' that is to say she will be satisfied with inflicting only one blow on you. Resolvas as Ussing says = absolvas, 'pay her off,' 'gain a quittance.' This is the only meaning that will give a meaning to una plaga, for obviously it cannot refer to a blow inflicted on the Bacchante, as obsequaris shows, and feriet saepius is thus properly contrasted with una plaga. Resolve in Plautus is often used in the sense of paying off a debt. Ussing on As. 430, quotes Epid. 143, 348; Men. 913. He adds, Cato, R. R. 144, Si quid redemptoris opera domino damni datum erit resolvito, and Id. 149, boni viri arbitrato resolvat.

at pol qui: qui, perhaps originally an ablative, is added to particles of asseveration, as edepol qui, quippe qui, at pol qui, hercle qui, ecastor qui, at qui. Munro and Howard on Lucr. 1. 755, have vindicated ut qui. certa res est: other colloquial phrases meaning 'I am determined' are certumst, consultumst, deliberatumst, stat mihi.

78. in mentemst, 1. 1. 26 supra.

81. eo more expertem. Experts was not uncommonly used with an ablative in old Latin. As. 1. 1. 31, expers metu; Pers. 4. 3. 40, ea res me domo expertem facit; Sall. Cat. 34, fama atque fortunis expertes; Turpil. 157 (Ribb.), expers malitiis. The reading and meaning of Catull. 66. 67, where the mss. give omnibus expers unguentis, is disputed. offendere, 'to come upon'; not so strong as opprimere, which is to 'surprise.'

82. ilico, 'at once,' 'on the moment.' Like ibi, ilico refers either to time or locality.

84. tetuli. Cf. the archaic tetini. The mss. nearly always go astray in this old form.

86. tibi parituram: a proceleusmaticus in the fifth foot, but Bentley's parturam is not improbable.

87. quid igitur? It is, I think, just to concede to Ritschl that quid is the ablative qui with paragogic d; 'with what then?' Ussing holds that quid is the accusative and makes gravidam govern quid, comparing 2. 3. 16, et quod gravis est viro et me quod gravis est. He compares the Greek κείν τῃ and Most. 1. 2. 17, gnarures hanc rem. That would be possible if Plautus had written puerum and insaniam, but the interposition of an accusative between two ablatives is impossible. The transcribers of the Hadrianic age, who abolished this paragogic d in most cases, left it standing where they misunderstood it to be something else. Here they thought quid igitur stood for quid igitur est? Servius on Aen. 4. 229, though he misquotes the passage, testifies to the truth of puero; on the words, gravidam imperiis, he writes, Sic Plautus in Amphitruone: uxor tua non puero sed peste gravida est. See Note on quod, 1. 3. 7 supra. As to the long final syllable of igitur, it is either lengthened owing to the strong stop caused by the change of speakers, which was Ritschl's view, or else the passage is corrupt. There is no support for the view that the syllable was really long in Plautus.

89. malum, 'thrashing.' Malum often in Plautus means the punishment of slaves: for the pronunciation cf. vs. 71 supra. Such a remark as Sosia's was calculated to awaken the wrath of a woman in Alcumena's case.

91. Sosia retorts on his mistress. But not daring to say openly that she deserved malum, a thrashing, he turns it off by saying that she, as a pregnant woman, ought to get mālum, an apple, to eat when she feels sick. But it is very doubtful whether the verse can stand as it appears in the mss. Allowing that mālum may denote 'the pleasing punishment that women bear,' oportet is not rightly joined to mālum dari, and mālum jars with animo male esse occeperit in the next verse. I do not think any of the suggestions mentioned in the Critical Note are likely. Perhaps,

Enimvero praegnati oportet et mālum et malvam dari.

Mallows were a wholesome food with medicinal effect. Hor. Carm. 1. 31. 16; Epod. 2. 58; Mart. 10. 48; Arist. Plut. 544, σιτεῖσθαι ... ἀντὶ μὲν ἄρτων μαλάξης πτόρθους.

92. animo si male esse occeperit, 'if she begins to feel sick.' Animo male esse is a common phrase, cf. 5. 16. It seems to have especially denoted, to feel sick in the stomach. Pseud. 4. 1. 42, Credo animo male est Aedibus. Si. Quid iam? Ps. Quia edepol ipsum lenonem eromunt. Rud. 2. 6. 27, Perii, animo male fit: contine quaeso caput. CH. Pulmoneum edepol nimis velim vomitum vomas. And more generally of feeling unwell or faint; but sickness is meant here.

95. quid tibist? 2. 2. 37 supra.

96. concinnat, 1. 3. 31 supra.

97. ted ibi, 'when first did you notice that you began to be affected by it?' viz., by black bile. For implicari, of being caught in diseases, cf. Mart. 1. 79. 2, Ureret implicitum cum scelerata lues; Lucr. 6, 1232, Implicitum morbo; Liv. 2. 3.

40, Praetor gravi morbo implicitus. The vulgate tibi sensisti impliciscier is not tolerable. Ussing says it means 'that your bile began to be disordered,' but if bilem is understood from the previous verse, atram must be understood also, and that would make nonsense; secondly, impliciscier does not mean to begin to be disordered, or anything like it. Implicisci is the inceptive of implicari. It occurs nowhere else in really classical Latin, but Fronto ad M. Caes. 13, quotes a passage from an old poet which contains the word, but the passage is a very obscure and corrupt one.

100. hac noctu, 1. 1. 250 supra. qui sumus, a free construction, κατὰ σύνεσιν.

101. tetuli pedem, 2. 2. 84 supra. Cf. Catull. 14. 22, Ios huc interea valet, abite, Illuc, unde malum pedem tulistis; Most. 2. 2. 39, in hacce aedes pedem Nemo intro tetulit semel ut emigravimus; Men. 2. 3. 30, in hanc urbem pedem Nisi hodie, numquam intro tetulit; Ter. And. 4. 5. 13, numquam huc tetulissem pedem. Surely these parallels establish tetulit here if parallels can establish anything; yet LG, Ussing, and Leo keep intuli. ut, postquam, 'since,' a sense ut often bears in Plautus, Most. 2. 2. 40. etiam, 'yet.' Cf. As. 2. 4. 38, Scyphos quos utendos dedi, Philodamo rettulitne? Lib. Non etiam. Pers. 4. 4. 78, Nihil adhuc peccavit etiam.

102. Quid est, 2. 1. 6 supra.

106. ut commeminit, 'to the best of her recollection.' prodigiali Jovi, 'to Jove, god of prodigies.' In Greek, ἀποτροπαίω, 'the averter,' would probably be used; but ἀποτρόπαιος is generally applied to Apollo, as Ar. Av. 61, Ἀπολλὸν ἀποτρόπαιε τοῦ χασμήματος, = averruncus. Ussing remarks that Jupiter Depulsor, as the averter of prodigies, is mentioned in Inscriptions, Orelli, Inscr. 1230, 5621. He cites τεράστιος from Lucian, Tim. 41.

108. conprecata oportuit. Ussing remarks that esse is invariably omitted. Langen corrects him, p. 54, quoting Trin. 1092, Most. 1093, Bacch. 819, Cas. 4. 1. 8; but neither Ussing nor Langen notices that in all the passages they quote the verb is passive. The constructions of oportuit in Plautus are (1) with infinitive present or past, as Aul. 2. 2. 3, quem dividere argentum oportuit; Amph. 3. 2. 63, Primum carisse oportuit ne diceres. To this class belongs conprecata (esse) here. (2) With perfect infinitive passive personal, the auxiliary being generally, but not always, omitted, as Aul. 4. 10. 24, at non missam oportuit; Cas. 4. 1. 8, cenam iam esse coctam oportuit. (3) With the perfect infinitive passive impersonal, as Most. 5. 1. 42, Factum iam esse oportuit; Merc. 4. 1. 25, Dictum oportuit; Pers. 3. 3. 43, Dum stas reditum oportuit. mola salsa, the cake sprinkled with salt, commonly used in sacrifices, and often mentioned along with tus. Both of these things were used as offerings to avert evils portended by dreams. Martial. 7. 54, describes how he spent a fortune trying to avert the omens portended by the evil dreams a friend of his dreamed about him, Consumpsi salsasque molas et turis acervos. Cf. Tibull. 1. 5. 14, Ipse procuravi ne possent saeva nocere. Somnia ter sancta deveneranda mola. The ablatives are instrumental, denoting the means by which the prayer was offered. So Hor. Carm. 1. 30. 3; vocantis ture te multo Glyceræ; so Plin. 13. 2, ture supplicare; Catull. 64. 24, mero compellare (meo MSS.).

109. Vae capiti tuo: one of the commonest retorts in Plautus, often used by a person stung by a rude or sarcastic remark to which no fitting repartee suggests itself. Cf. Mil. 2. 3. 54, Tum mihi sunt manus inquinatae. Sc. Quidum? PA. Quia ludo luto. Sc. Vae capiti tuo. PA. Tuo istuc, Sceledre, promitto fore. Tua istuc refert, si curaveris, 'it is your interest to see to it,' namely, to sacrifice to the gods. But there is no rudeness in this remark, and the next line shows that Sosia's reply was rude, and the passage from the Miles just quoted shows that in Sosia's reply there was almost certainly a similar retort. Hence the conjecture of Palmerius, tuo istuc erit nisi curaveris, which, if we read re erit, will be near the MSS., and give a fair sense, 'that woe (which you imprecate on me) will really befall yourself, unless you look to it.' This might be taken as a threat of personal violence, or as a mere prediction of misfortune if Alcumena neglected to appease the gods. It was customary in retorts to leave the door open to a double interpretation. Cf. Mil. 2. 3. 15: Sc. Di te perdant. PA. Te istuc aequomst ... quoniam ocepisti eloqui, where see Tyrrell's note. In Mil. 4. 5. 10: Py. Verum oppressit. PA. Deos sperabo teque: the ostensible meaning of the reply is 'we will trust in the gods and you'; the real meaning is 'we will hope that the gods will crush you also'

110. iterum: the first time was at vs. 87. iám hic in: this is an anapaest; iam, unelided in the first syllable of a resolved arsis; hic, short as usual. inclementer dicit, 'speaks rudely.' Pseud. 1. 1. 25, Cur inclementer dicis lepidis litteris? Rud. 1. 2. 26, Aut qui inclementer dicat homini libero; cf. Rud. 3. 4. 29; Truc. 2. 7. 44. sine malo, 'without being punished for it,' cf. 89 supra.

111. Tace tu (Sosia). tu dic (Alcumena).

112. Ah! very often begins a speaker's words at the end of a line: see Ter. Phorm. 5. 3. 26: And. 5. 3. 1: Ad. 1. 2. 32, etc.

113. etiam id tu scis, 'do you actually know that?' Cf. 141 infra, etiam id credis, 'do you actually believe that?'

quippe qui: 'why, you told me yourself.' See note on 73 supra.

114. expugnāvisses ... occideris, 'how you had stormed and how you slew.' Both these tenses are of course legitimate, and the variation is Plautine. See notes on 1. 2. 25, Prol. 74.

115. tute istic, 1. 1. 212 supra.

116. ubi ego audiverim, 'where should I have heard it?'

117. roga forms a pyrrhic, as many dissyllabic imperatives in Plautus and Terence owing to the influence of the verbal and metrical accent, as mane, cave, abi, redi, vola, ama. Put remained a pyrrhic in the best age, as Pers. 4. 9, Hoc puta non iustum est. The scansion Hānc rogá. Me quidem praesente is not possible. Luchs has clearly shown that the accent never falls on the first syllable of quidem in trochaic verses in Plautus, and in iambic trimeters only when it is in the first foot; in iambic septenarii in the fifth foot also.

118. mirum quin. An ironical phrase, of frequent occurrence. 'It's a wonder he won't contradict his master.' mirum quin and mirum ni (or mira sunt ni) are both common in Plautus, but their usages are quite different: mirum ni or mira ni states a supposition which would account for a given state of facts; 'it's a wonder if such a state of things is not the case.' See 1. 1. 129. So Capt. 4. 2. 42—

Mirumque adeost ni hunc Aetoli sibi fecere agoranomum.

But mirum quin is invariably used sarcastically of a thing which is represented to be perfectly impossible; Most. 2. 2. 62—

TR. Ait illum hoc pacto sibi dixisse mortuom.

TH. In somnis? TR. Mirum quin vigilanti diceret, Qui abhinc sexaginta annis occisus foret, where see Sonnenschein's note. It is in this sense Horace has Sat. 2. 1. 54, mirum Ut neque calce lupus quemquam neque dente petit bos.

119. Vera vólo loqui te. The first two feet are as indicated by the pointing; trochee and tribrach, not dactyl and trochee, cf. 124 infra.

121. quom ... interrogas, 'seeing that you ask me such a question.' Quom with the indicative is almost equal to quoniam, and is of common occurrence in Plautus. One case of this, that is quom after verbs of rejoicing, has been mentioned above, 2. 2. 10.

124. credis ẽo fit. Trochee and spondee, not dactyl and spondee.

125. proinde ut, 2. 2. 53 supra.

129. dedisse owing to the metrical accent, which is much stronger at the beginning of the verse than elsewhere, is pronounced as a tribrach. Next to the first foot, the fifth foot of septenarii allows the greatest influence to the accent: the second syllable of vicissatim is shortened in this place, Stich. 4. 1. 27, Nós potius onerẽmus nosmet vicissatim vóluptátibus.

130. ita animatus fui, exactly our 'I was so minded,' 'I intended.' So moratus.

131. ĩstuc. The first syllable of iste is shortened under the same circumstances as the first syllable of ille, Prol. 148 supra, i.e. when a short monosyllable precedes, making up together with that first syllable the arsis or thesis of a foot. Mueller Plaut. Prol. p. 330 seqq.

132. ego quidem. Ussing has an important note here. The fact that ego is sometimes expressed along with equidem tells against the view formerly entertained that equidem is derived from ego quidem, a view denied by Priscian (16. p. 1033), who held equidem to be a stronger form of quidem, which is practically enclitic. The following passages are quoted by Ussing, where ego is expressed with equidem, Bacch. 3. 3. 33; Merc. 2. 1. 40; Ter. Heaut. 4. 1. 19; Sall. Cat. 51. 55, Jug. 10. 6, 85. 26; Cic. de Orat. 2. 6. 25.

The idea must, however, have prevailed that equidem was derived from ego quidem, as it was almost invariably joined with the first person. Bentley (on Ter. Heaut. 4. 1. 19, Ad. 5. 3. 65) stated that it was always joined with the first person of the verb before the age of Nero. Ussing quotes against him Sallust, Cat. 52. 11. 16; Varro, R. R. 1. 5. 1. Ussing also adds the following four passages from poetry to refute Bentley, four passages, I must say, most unfortunately chosen. Virgil Aen. 10. 29, Equidem credo mea vulnera restant, where equidem is to be joined with credo; (Cf. Georg. 1. 415; Aen. 4. 12; 6. 849). Pers. 5. 45, and Lucan 8. 824, being of the age of Nero, do not tell against Bentley's view. There remains only Propert. 2. 31. 5,

Hic equidem Phoebus visus mihi pulchrior ipso Marmoreus tacita carmen hiare lyra, where Phoebus should be inserted instead of equidem, a correction proposed on the ground that marmoreus has no noun to agree with it.

The only passages in Plautus where equidem is testified by mss. and demanded by the metre, where it is not joined with the first person, are Aul. 2. 1. 18; (?) Epid. 4. 2. 33; Pers. 4. 3. 76.

133. manē, vs. 117 supra.

136. īstam, vs. 131 supra.

137. quid hoc sit hominis? 'What sort of a creature is this?' See 2. 1. 28 supra. The general term hominis expresses vagueness and uncertainty on Amphitruo's part. For homo, 'human creature,' applied to, or including, a woman, cf. Varro, Men. Sat. (p. 174 Riese), vix duo homines decem mensibus edolatum unum reddunt puerum; Ov. Fast. 5. 620, Quo bos ex homine est ex bove facta dea; Plin. 28. 9. 33, dulcissimum ad hominis camelinum lac.

140. enim vero, 'well, certainly,' 2. 2. 26 supra.

144. pro cerrita circumferri? 'to be purified as a lunatic.' The derivation of cerritus is uncertain. It has been connected with Ceres, gerrae (nonsense), cerebrum. But Preller is probably right in connecting it with the old word Cerus. Cerus manus in the Carm. Saliare meant creator bonus according to Festus, hence cerritus would be the same as larvatus, 'possessed by a spirit,' 'uncanny.' Vanicek (1109) curiously derives it from the root of ἐπικάρσιος, 'one-sided,' 'cranky.' Circumferre (hostias according to Ussing, who refers to Preller, Rom. Myth. p. 301, 371) meant to carry victims round a piece of land with the object of purifying it, hence, by a well-known Latin inversion, the passive verb means 'to have victims carried round one,' 'to be purified.' Hence the verb circumferre came to mean simply 'to cleanse,' 'purify,' Virg. Aen. 6. 229, Idem ter socios pura circumtulit unda. Servius on that passage quotes from Plautus pro larvato te circumferam, i.e. purgabo, probably referring to this passage from memory. edepol qui, vs. 72 supra.

145. larvarum plenast, 'full of hobgoblins,' 'swayed by sprites,' larvae, hence larvatus, 'bewitched.' Cf. Chaucer, Miller's Tale, "I crowche the from elves and from wights." Larua is always three, larvatus four syllables in Plautus.

146. Em tibi pateram, eccam, 'there 's the cup, see.' As none of the editions with which I was working, neither Weise, nor Ussing, nor Goetz-Loewe, nor Leo, mentions that it had been proposed to give these words to Thessala, I fancied I was original in proposing to do so. But I find that in many old editions this certain arrangement is adopted, though who was the first to make the alteration I have not, as yet, been able to discover. The arrangement is given by Lambinus, Schmieder, and others. Em is regularly joined with dative, as em tibi! 'take that,' of a blow, or repartee: accusative as em clavim, 'there's the key,' Most. 2. 1. 72, or both accusative and dative as here. One of the prettiest emendations in Plautus made by Leo is based on this use of em. Aul. 4. 7. 12:—

Em, mater mea,

Tibi rem potiolem verbo: clamat parturit.

where the MSS. give video for verbo. Em is only another form of en, Greek ἐν, ἐν. It is not to be confounded with hem, the exclamation of surprise or emotion.

146. Cedo mi, 'hand it here': cedo, plural cette, as in the common phrase cette dextras. nunc iam, always trisyllabic in Plautus, though whether it is derived from nunc iam, or merely a lengthened form of nunc, as etiam may be of et, and whether it is to be written as one word or two, I leave to philologists to decide.

150. praestrigiatrix, 'witch,' 'sorceress.' Praestrigiator occurs Aul. 4. 4. 3, etc.; praestigiae, 'cheating,' Capt. 3. 3. 9. The Plautine mss. vary between praesti- and praestri- (the Ambrosian gives praestri-, Poen. 5. 3. 6, Truc. 1. 2. 32). The spelling praestri- is now generally preferred. The derivation is uncertain; it is generally connected with praestringere, 'to dazzle,' hence 'to bewitch.' Possibly it may be connected with strix, 'the vampire,' the familiar of witches. Cf. Propert. 4. 5. 17, Consuluitque striges nostro de sanguine. The first syllable in striges is long, Pseud. 3. 2. 31, Non condimentis condiunt sed strigibus, though it is short in Propertius and Ovid. The derivation from praestringo was, however, clearly present to Caecilius when he wrote (209 Ribb.) ita omnes meos dolos fallacias Praestrigias praestrinxit commoditas patris.

154. omnes, nominative; congeminauimus, 'we have all doubled.' Congeminauimus is practically intransitive, but it may be better to write the line thus:—

Nunc si patera pateram pariet, omnes congeminauimur.
And this seems right, for what is the force of the perfect peperit?

155. postulat, 'wants'; ἀξιοῦ, 'makes it her aim.'

156. Unde haec igitur est, nisi abs te quae mihi dono datast? 'From whence came this, unless (it be) the one that you gave me?' I think the construction, which is slightly irregular, but perfectly legitimate and intelligible, has been misunderstood. See Crit. Note.

159. Opus mist istuc exquisito, 1. 3. 7 supra.

160. Quid tibi, 2. 2. 37 supra.

161. Id quod est. Cf. Catull. 10. 9, Respondi, id quod erat; Epid. 1. 1. 19, Quid tibi vis dicam, nisi quod est; Hor. Sat. 1. 6. 60, sed, quod erat, narro, according to the reading of some mss. In Ter. Her. 5. 3. 3, Visum est. Certen? Certe. Deus sum, si hoc itast. Verum réperies, we should, I think, read simply est for itast. cum cruciatu. Cum is often used in a retort, which conveys a threat. Cf. Capt. 3. 5. 23; As. 2. 4. 6. When an adjective is joined to bono or malo the preposition may be omitted. So malo tuo, 1. 1. 167, 212 supra. nisi apparet, 'unless it is forthcoming.' Cf. compareant, 2. 1. 85.

163. captas, used like temptas, above, to catch in one's words; exactly, 'you are trying to catch me.' quia tute praecucurristi. quia is often in Plautus, 'in that,' 'the fact being,' Cas. 2. 3. 11, uxor me excruciat quia vivit. See Langen, p. 54 sqq.

164. praecucurristi. It is characteristic of archaic Latin to retain the reduplication in this verb: so admomordi, Frag. Aul. ap. Gell. 7. 9. But the reduplication of curro is kept in some authors of the best age, as Caesar.

165. post hanc. I regard this emendation as certain. Sosia has the cistula in his hands, as hinc in the previous verse shows; an accusative denoting cistulam is wanted, otherwise obsignasti would infallibly refer to eam, i.e. pateram, making nonsense of the passage: posthac cannot stand, for, as Langen has shown, posthac never refers to doing any single action after another, but refers to a course of conduct continued through a time: generally it is like our expression "for the future." Poen. 2. 2. 14, ego faxo posthac dei deaeque ceteri contentiores mage erunt: see Langen, p. 258 sqq.

169. pergam exequi, 'I will go on inquiring into the matter.' Ussing quotes the following passages, which show that pergam exequi is quite sound: Liv. 6. 14. 13, exequebantur quaerendo ubi tantae rei furtum occultaretur; Id. 9. 16. 4, exequuntur quaerendo a consule legati, quonam pacto crederet; 22. 3. 2, quae cognosse in rem erat, summa omnia cum cura inquirendo exequebatur; 25. 29. 10, exsequentibus sciscitando quae acta cum Romanis essent. But the strongest testimony is pergam exquirere, 4. 1. 7 infra.

172. accubui, κατεκλίθην, at supper.

174. argumenta, 'her proofs' that I was here before. If argumentum is read with J, it would mean, probably, 'let her tell her story,' argumentum being often the plot or subject of a story or picture. See Sonnenschein on Most. 1. 2. 86. Cf. 5. 1. 35.

177. me ad mortem dedit: 'has done me to death.' dare

in Plautus often represents the $\tau\acute{\iota}\theta\eta\mu\iota$ not the $\delta\acute{\iota}\delta\omega\mu\iota$ root. So in the phrases dare turbam, dare pugnam, sic dabo, etc.

181. vir ego tuos sim? 'I your husband?' The subjunctive is used in denying by an expression of astonishment a statement made by another. Cf. infra, 2. 2. 186, Quid ego tibi deliqui si quoi nupta sum tecum fui? AMPH. Tun mecum fueris? Cic. ad Quint. Frat. 3. 1, Ego tibi irascerer? ... ego te videre noluerim? Ussing quotes Asin. 1. 4. 21, Putem ego? Truc. 615, Quid? manu vicerim? Cf. also Ter. Hec. 4. 1. 9, Vir ego tuos sim? And. 5. 4. 12, hic vir sit bonus? Mr. Purser adds Cic. Att. 2. 12. 1, negent illi Publium plebeium factum esse! (Tyrrell).

182. haeret haec res, 'matters are come to a pretty pass,' 'we have come to a deadlock.' The phrase is not uncommon in Plautus. Pseud. 4. 2. 27, Perii: nunc homo in medio lutost. Nomen nescit: haeret haec res; Trin. 4. 2. 59, Haeret haer res, si quidem ego absens sum quam praesens longior. It is varied in Pseud. 1. 5. 8, Occisa est haec res, haeret hoc negotium.

183. qua istaec propter. For this tmesis of quapropter cf. Ter. Hec. 3. 3. 4, Qua me propter exanimatum citius eduxi foras; Hor. Sat. 2. 6. 95, quo, bone, circa; Trin. 4. 1. 14, disque tulissent; Pers. 2. 2. 28, quoi pol cunque; Cas. 2. 6. 18, per pol saepe peccas. These were no doubt all usual tmeses: there is no trace in Plautus of the artificial illegitimate tmeses of Ennius.

185. tibi deliqui, 'how have I behaved badly by you?' For this dativus incommodi cf. the joke in Aul. 4. 4. 8, St. Nihil equidem tibi abstuli. EU. At illud, quod tibi abstuleras cedo.

186. Tun mecum fueris, supra, 181.

187. saltem tute si pudoris egeas sumas mutuom. 'Assume a virtue if you have it not,' Hamlet, Act 3. Sc. 4, a passage so like this that it almost forces one to suppose that Shakespeare had seen this play represented on the stage in some form, or had read a translation of it.

188. facinus, 'conduct.' Facinus, when it became specialised to mean bad conduct, always denoted a deed of violence; it never meant a scandalous crime, flagitium. It was originally a neutral word denoting simply a thing done (facio), as in Mil. 2. 4. 24, Nimis mirum est facinus quomodo hæc hinc potuerit transire, and Rud. 1. 2. 73; and in Cicero even præclarum facinus, rectissimum facinus occur. quod ... insimulas, 'which you accuse me of.' Insimulo sometimes took two accusatives, person and thing; cf. infra 227, meo viro sic me insimulare falso facinus tam malum. So accuso, Trin. 1. 2. 59, Si id me non accusas. nostro generi non decet, 'becomes not my family.' Decet is often joined with a dative in old authors, see 3. 4. 24.

189. captas, 'if you try to catch me in unchastity you will fail to catch me.' Captare is joined with a genitive in imitation of accusare, damnare, with genitive.

191. Propemodum, 'rather!' portu Persico, 1. 1. 250 supra.

192. adsentiant: both adsentio and adsentior were used in the best age. For a full catalogue of deponents used with active forms in old Latin see Langen, pp. 59-68. Cf. note on 3. 2. 3.

194. We have hiatus of the last syllable of Amphitruo here, 5. 1. 23 and 29. I suspect Plautus may have been influenced by the Greek form Amphitruon in all these passages.

195. tamen, cf. 1. 3. 44 supra. This delicate use of tamen, referring to an adjective expressed, or thought implied, is among the niceties of the Latin language. Propertius, 2. 4. 10, Unde tamen veniant tot mala caeca via est, 'dark is the path whence so many evils come, yet they come.' Virg. Aen. 4. 329, Si quis mihi parrulus aula luderet Aeneas qui te tamen ore referret, 'though far away.' Virg. Ecl. 10. 31, Tamen cantabitis, inquit, Montibus his restris.

tuam rem curet. Curare is also used with dative in Plautus, Mil. 2. 6. 2, erili negotio curat, where see Tyrrell's Note. fungatur: fungi always takes accusative in Plautus; generally in Terence, who only once uses it with ablative, Ad. 4. 3. 12. utor in Plautus and Terence usually takes abl., seldom acc. abutor ('to use up') is joined by both only with acc. frui takes abl. the only time (As. 5. 2. 68) it occurs in Plautus: in Terence it has accusative once, abl. four times. Vescor does not seem to have been certainly used by either Plautus or Terence, but in old Latin, as well as later, it sometimes took an accusative, Accius 218 (Ribb.), dapem, 189, facinus. Potior took either genitive (1. 1. 33 supra), acc. (Rud. 1. 3. 7), or abl. (As. 5. 2. 66).

196. subditivo, 'counterfeit,' 1. 2. 35.

198. praestrigiator, 150 supra. frustratur, 'bemocks,' 'befools.'

199. matrem familias. Juno pronuba was the patron saint of marriage, the prototype of matronly virtue, the goddess presiding over the wife's department of the household; by her it was proper for a married woman to swear. Cf. Juv. 2. 98, Et per Iunonem domini iurante ministro.

familias, archaic genitive. In this word only, and only in the phrases, pater familias, mater familias, was this old termination preserved. The genitives escas, monetas, Latonas are cited from the Odyssey of Livius Andronicus; terras, fortunas from Naevius. Ritschl has introduced it into several passages of Plautus to avoid hiatus, as formas in Mil. 4. 4. 12. See Note on Arg. 2. 1 supra.

201. ut: there is an ellipse before these words, 'So may she bless me.' Such an ellipse was not uncommon. Ussing quotes Liv. 22. 53. 10, Ex mei animi sententia, inquit, ut ego rem publicam p. R. non deseram. On the other hand the clause beginning ut is sometimes omitted, as Prop. 3. 15. 1-3; Hor. Sat. 2. 2. 124, the prayer being expressed.

204. ēs: the second person of sum is always long in Plautus. Even when the -e suffers apocope after a short vowel, the long quantity is retained: as Mil. 3. 1. 30, umbrā's amantum; Asin. 3. 1. 8, satis dicaculā's amatrix. Mulier es, audacter iuras. Ussing remarks that the poets often accuse women of readily perjuring themselves. He might have enlarged on this commonplace. In Mil. 2. 5. 47, Philocomasium makes a solemn promise, and immediately, as a matter of course, breaks it, the comment on which is Muliebri fecit fide. Propertius, 1. 15. 35, and elsewhere, tells us that Cynthia was a habitual perjurer, using awful imprecations on her eyes if she were not telling the truth. Horace Carm. 2. 8. 9, tells us that Barine seemed to find it profitable to perjure herself by the host of heaven.

205. proterve, prōtervus in Plautus and Terence, where the metre shows the quantity; so prōfecturus from proficisci, Trin. 1. 2. 112: Plaut. also has prōficiscor, and similarly varied between prōfiteor and prōfiteor, Brix, Capt. 3. 1. 20. Neither confidentem nor protervus lose their bad sense here, but virtue may be self-confident and forward.

206. Enim verbis proba's, 'Yes, you are modest in words!' See on enim, 2. 2. 26 supra. Probus often 'modest,' opposite of improbis, 'bold.'

207-210. The finest lines in the play.

208. cupidinem: masc. as often, Hor. Sat. 1. 1. 61.

209. cognatum concordiam, 'good will towards my relatives.' Cognatum is, of course, objective, as the other genitives are. pudicitiam et pudorem, 'chastity and modesty.'

210. ut is trajected out of its place owing to the necessities of the metre. See Crit. Notes on Prol. 9, Prol. 32, supra, for Plautine trajections. morigera, an excellent word, denoting the chief virtue of a good wife, that of conforming her will to her husband's and being ever ready to make his likings her own. Lucretius can find no better word when in some of his most beautiful lines he describes the winning ways which a woman of inferior beauty may possess: 4. 1274 seqq.—

*Nec divinitus interdum, Venerisque sagittis Deteriore fit ut forma muliercula ametur.
Nam facit ipsa suis interdum femina factis,
Morigerisque modis et munde corpore culto,
Ut facile insuescat te secum degere vitam.*

Cf. also the fine lines Ter. Andr. 1. 5. 57 seqq. munifica sim bonis, prosim probis, 'be bounteous in kind services, do you good with my goodness.' Bonis and probis are, of course, neuters used as nouns. See on Hor. Sat. 2. 3. 223, gaudens Bellona cruentis. The good wife is described in Prov. 31. 12, "She will do him good and not evil all the days of her life."

211. examussimst optuma, 'a pattern of perfection.' We are told by Nonius that amussis meant a carpenter's rule. Most. 1. 2. 19. Aedes factae probe examussim; Men. 50, Ut hanc rem vobis examussim disputem; Mil. 3. 1. 37, Inest in hoc amussitata sua sibi ingenua indoles. The same idea is in the words of Ausonius, Parent. 5. 8 (of his grandmother), a lady of the old school, who Ad perpendicularum seque suosque habuit: perpendicularum being a carpenter's plumb-line.

212. delenitus, κηληθείς, 'bewitched.' Cist. 2. 1. 41, Tu me delenis: propter te haec pecco.

213. ne tu te usu perdis, 'don't let another man usurp your title to yourself.' usu, 'by prescription,' by undisputed possession for a time, ownership was acquired: by allowing the false Amphitruo to be considered the true one much longer, the true Amphitruo would really lose his title to the name. See on 1. 1. 221, me pugnīs usu fecisti tuom.

214. ita nunc homines inmutantur: 'people are so altered': an expression of which Terence has a reminiscence, Eun. 2. 1. 19, adeo homines immutarier ex amore!

216. quid ais: 1. 1. 210 supra.

220. causam dicere quin, 'to show cause against,' was a common phrase. multem matrimonio, 'amerce you of your marriage.' Multare took an ablative of the thing of which a person was deprived. Cf. multabo mina, Trin. 3. 2. 82; poculo multabitur, Stich. 5. 4. 43.

221. convēnit, 'agreed,' 'done!' 1. 1. 71; Cas. 2. 3. 54.

222. hos, slaves with baggage.

226. illi meo viro, 'that husband of mine.' Cf. illi patri meo, Prol. 46, if the reading be sound.

227. insimulare: 188 supra.

228. Naucrate. If the reading is sound the last syllable is long, and Plautus, in forming an ablative from a Greek word in -ης, may have thought it more proper to make the final -e long than short. This use of a Greek proper name is not of the same sort as those ablatives in -e, apparently long, discussed by Mueller, Plaut. Prol. p. 15-18; in the majority of these cases -i or -ei should be substituted for -e; mortei, Mil. 3. 1. 112; sortei, Cas. 2. 7. 5; partei, Men. 3. 2. 3, etc. Lachmann on Lucr. 1. 739, says, "quae apud Graecos in -e, mittunt eorum ablativi produci solent," but the instances against this rule are at least as numerous as those in its favour.

ACT III. 1.

Jupiter unfolds the further developments of the play.

I suspect that this scene, which might be omitted without loss, is not genuine. In fact all the 'explanatory' parts of the play seem to be late, and by the same hand as the Prologue. If this be so, it is probably rash to try and emend the metrical corruptions. For, as I have said before, I cannot assent to Ritschl's view that the writers of these parts fully attained to Plautus's art. Thus the very difficult question arises, How far did they succeed in attaining to it, in what instances fall short of it? In my Critical Notes I have, however, treated the scene as if it were Plautine.

1. quoiei, archaic for quoi, cui. quoui (or quoiei) "frequenti in legibus saeculi VII scriptura," Ritschl, quoted by Brix on Trin. 2. 2. 77.

2. idem, of change in the same person as usual.

3. superiore ... cenaculo, 'in the top attic,' by way of joke for the sky. Ennius, Annal. 68 (Mueller), cenacula maxima caeli, though he probably used the word without any humble association. But in Juv. 10. 86, rarus venit in cenacula miles, the sense of 'garret' is clear. Varro, L. L. 5. 162, says the upper part of the house was called cenacula, postquam in superiore parte cenitare coeperunt.

5. quom extemplo = simul ac, the moment; a common phrase. ilico, 'straightway.'

8. incohatam transigam comoediam, 'leave the comedy half finished'; literally, 'bring it to a close when only begun.' Incohatum is thus often used by Cicero: Or. 1. 2, incohatum ac rudia; Off. 1. 43, cognitio manca atque incohatum; N. D. 1. 20, erat autem difficile rem tantam tamque praeclaram incohatam relinquere, where Mayor says the perfect participle always has this meaning.

11. contraxerim, 'the trouble which I have created.' Cf. Cas. 3. 2. 31, aliquid contrahere cupio litigi inter eos duos.

12. expetat, 'fall on the head of,' 1. 2. 33 supra.

13. memet ut ocepi would introduce an impossible anapaest: the first syllable of an anapaest must never be the last of a polysyllable.

14. adsimulavero: for this tense see on Prol. 53 supra.

16. igitur demum, 'then at length,' l. 1. 56 supra.

17. Abraham denies that in tempore is Plautine. He states that Plautus uses either temperi, which he has twenty times, or per tempus, which he has five times, or in ipso tempore, which he has twice. In the only other passage where the mss. preserve in tempore, Capt. 4. 2. 56, it is corrupt: Abraham adds ipso—

Quantúmst hominum optumum óptume in [ipso] tempore ádvenis.

Terence uses in tempore, not temperi. This scene may be even later than Terence.

18. quod grávida est, 'the child she is pregnant with': a very strange use. An equally strange construction follows: viro, 'by her husband,' me, 'by me.' I am not able to quote any parallel to either of these, for quid igitur, 2. 2. 87 supra, is probably no parallel to the first, and these lines form the strongest objection to the authenticity of this scene.

20. continuo seems rather to mean 'close' than 'immediately.' There is no other instance of this meaning of continuo, which is always of continuity of time, 'immediately'; but the adjective continuus is used of space as well, and it is not impossible continuo may have had that meaning too.

ACT III. 2.

Alcumena, driven wild by Amphitruo's charges, declares her intention of leaving him. Jupiter in the guise of Amphitruo apologises to her for what Amphitruo had said, and is forgiven.

1. aedibus: for the accentuation see on l. 1. 191.

2. argutam, i.e. argutam esse. The infinitive of exclamation. argutam, 'accused of'; so arguere is often used by Plautus. He makes rather a good joke on the word, Pseud. 2. 4. 56:—

Ecquid argutust? CH. Malorum facinorum saepissime.

where the play is on the adjective 'shrewd,' and the participle 'accused.'

3. testat clamitat, 'protests and rants.' The asyndeton is most strictly Plautine; Prol. 13 supra. I have no doubt of the truth of this emendation, which is in fact the reading of the mss., save that it gives t for r, and t for c, both extremely common exchanges in mss. testat, for the later testatur, is in keeping with archaic usage, a striking feature of which is the large number of verbs used with an active form, which in later times were only deponent. A very long list of these verbs will be found in Tyrrell's note to Mil. 2. 2. 17. The most common of them is perhaps opinor, often changed by the transcribers to opinor. We have in this play contemplo, 1. 1. 287; tuto, 2. 2. 19; morigero, 3. 3. 26; partio, 4. 3. 1.

5. susque deque esse habituram, 'that I will think it of no consequence.' Cf. Cic. Att. 14. 6, de Octavio susque deque, in which judgment Cicero made a very false estimate of character. Laberius 29 (Ribb.), nunc tu lentus, nunc tu susque deque fers. The Greek phrase ἀνὰ καὶ κάτω is not used in this way.

6. perpetiar ... insimulatam. The construction of patior with an accusative participle is a good one. Cf. Accius 365 (Ribb.), exulare sinitis, sistis pelli, pulsum patimini; Inc. Fab. 68 (Ribb.), Ignominiae se dolore victum non potuit pati; Phorm. 2. 1. 74, egone illam cum illo ut patiar nuptam unum diem. I have often wondered whether patere could be worked in to mediate the contending readings, patet and patere in Hor. Sat. 2. 2. 29:—

Imparibus formis deceptum te patere! Esto.*

If we accept Madvig's view that magis means 'a dish,' I should certainly read patere.

7. quin ... deseram: this depends on faciam in the previous verse. "I won't act so as not to desert him"; "I most certainly will desert him." Cf. Mil. 2. 3. 12, non enim faciam quin scias; 1. 1. 244 supra, Tu me vivos hodie numquam facies quin sim Sosia.

9. nolle esse dicta: so the common phrase nollem factum, 'I am sorry for it.' Ad. 5. 113, nollem huc exitum.

11. si me illam amentem ad sese studeam recipere, 'If I am anxious to recall that distracted creature to her senses.' amentem is clearly right, in my judgment, for amantem. Alcumena is driven out of her wits by the false charge. amantem has no point. For amens, of people driven wild by anger, cf. Accius 450 (Ribb.), Heu cor ira fervit caecum, amentia rapior ferorque; Catull. 64. 197, amenti caeca furore (of deserted Ariadne); Virg. Aen. 4. 203, amens animi, et rumore accensus amaro. Amentem is demanded by ad sese, 'to herself,' i.e. to her senses. Cf. the phrases apud se esse, penes se esse; and ἔξω ἑαυτοῦ, ἐντὸς ἑαυτοῦ.

13. negotium exhibuit, πράγματα παρέσχεν, 'got him into trouble.'

16. Et: continuative of Alcumena's speech, vs. 9.

17. conloqui, with accusative, as l. 1. 185.

18. quo te avortisti? 'whither have you turned yourself away?' The editors generally prefer quor; but in the other passages where the phrase occurs, Truc. 2. 4. 7, Titin. 93 (Ribb.), no MS. gives quor, though in the citation from Titinius, all MSS. save one give quoa; but I think this looks like a beginning of avortisti. Still quor may be right. ingeni ingenium, 'my nature's nature.' See Crit. Note. Cf. indolem ingeni, Mil. 3. 3. 47.

19. osa sum. This passage is quoted by both Priscian, 9. 4. p. 517, and by Nonius p. 148, for this auxiliary form of odi, the only passage in classical Latin where it occurs, though perosus and exosus are both usual.

20. Heia autem inimicos? 'how now? enemies, pray?' Heia is here used as an expostulatory particle. Pers. 2. 2. 30 Heia! 'Come, come,' to which Sophoclidisca replies Beia! 'Hum, hum.' The general use of heia is a particle of encouragement, of cheering, or urging a person on, 'on with you.' If we urge a person on to some better course, the particle becomes expostulatory, so that the two usages harmonize. We are reminded of Shakespeare, Pericles Act 4. Sc. 6, "Some more, be sage," i.e. some different language. autem, says Ussing, is used when we repeat another person's words with wonder or contempt. He quotes Pseud. 305, Metuo credere. Ps. Credere autem? Ter. Eun. 798, Egone non tangam meam? CH. Tuam autem? "quotha!"

22. Potin ut, i.e. potisne est ut, 'can you not?' The construction of abstinere with accusative is common in Plautus, especially with manus; also with amorem, Mil. 4. 7. 26; and with se with ablative, Mil. 3. 1. 49, incommoditate abstinere me; also with plain ablative. All these constructions are Ciceronian. Plautus also joins abstineo to an infinitive, as Cas. 1. 3. 24, dum mihi abstineant invidere. Horace's abstineto irarum, Carm. 3. 27. 69, has no Latin parallel.

26. nisi sis stultior stultissimo: a second protasis, quite in accordance with comic abundantia. Ussing gives several good parallels. For stultior stultissimo, cf. Curc. 4. 3. 19, Stultior stulto fuisti.

28. id, 'on that account,' 'with that object.' Cf. Soph. Oed. R. 1005, καὶ μὴν μάλιστα τοῦτ' ἀφικόμεν ὅπως σοῦ πρὸς δόμους ἐλθόντος εὖ πράξαιμι τι, where see Jebb's note. This construction is more frequent in Latin than Greek. Ussing quotes Cas. 650, Id huc missa sum. Mil. 1151, Id nos ad te venimus; Ter. Eun. 1005, Nunc id prodeo, ut conveniam Parmenonem; Curc. 456, Quid hoc quod te venio; Most. 7. 3. 5, Nunc hoc quod ad te noster me misit senex; Pseud. 643, Quod missus huc sum. Cf. 1. 1. 11 supra, Non me idem hoc luci mittere potuit. All these are instances of verbs of motion.

purigarem. Ritschl, as he has asserted the form iurigo for Plautus 2. 2. 74 supra, has also reinstated purigo. The mss. preserve no trace of the -i in any instance, but there is not the slightest doubt that Ritschl is right in restoring the longer form in 3. 3. 10 infra,

Habui expurgationem; facta pax est: optumest;
and in Merc. 5. 3. 4,

At ego expurgationem habebo, ne succenseat.

Cf. Mil. 2. 6. 17; 2. 6. 37; 3. 1. 179; Merc. 4. 3. 37. Less certain are 3. 2. 64 infra: Cas. 5. 3. 5; Aul. 4. 10. 61; for Plautus certainly used the contracted form purgo, Stich. 5. 3. 59, the only form known to Terence.

32. non .. quo, 'not that I believed you false.' Quo is regularly joined with negatives in this usage, i.e., when a reason is stated and denied, in which construction it is quite classical. Roby, § 1744.

33. sum : not elided in resolved arsis.

36. vel rogato Sosiam : vel is used in Plautus without another vel expressed. Ussing quotes Epid. 688, Vel da pignus; Most. 293, Vel rationem puta; 906, Vel mihi denumerato, 1074, Vel hominem iube aedis mancupare. It probably is used with reference to a mental ellipse, as here (either take my word), or (if you don't believe me) ask Sosia. Or perhaps it may be explained with reference to its derivation from volo simply as = 'if you like.'

40. praevertier, 1. 3. 30 supra.

41. illud, ἐκεῖνο, what follows, 'I know this, how it pained my heart.' Illum can scarcely refer to iocum, for, as Ussing well points out, Alcumena did not yet consider it a joke.

43. veniam. Ritschl, in his Prol. Trin. p. 236, condemns an anapaestic word in the second foot, but in his Opusc. 2. p. 473, he withdraws this opinion. There are not many, but the verse does not sound unmetrical, and the insertion of mi is very simple. The following lines contain anapaestic words in the second foot, studion, Ter. Ad. 3. 3. 281; etiam, Phorm. 5. 8. 38; operam, Pers. 3. 1. 44; drachumis, Pseud. 3. 2. 19; animum, Capt. 1. 2. 1; Merc. 4. 3. 29; aliud, Trin. 2. 457; equidem, Mil. 2. 6. 66; equidem, Poen. 3. 3. 68; animi, Ter. Hec. 3. 5. 57; adeo, Heaut. 1. 1. 61; animo, ibid. 5. 1. 39; egomet, Phorm. 1. 4. 39; miseram, Ad. 3. 4. 40; decumo, 1. 2. 19 supra. In all these instances a monosyllable follows; I am not able to quote an instance where the monosyllable is elided. But Poen. 5. 2. 133, leno hic habitat vicinus shows, if sound, that the monosyllable was not invariable. Cf. Brix Trin. 2. 3. 6, from whom the above list is, mainly, taken.

44. 'I disproved (feci irrita) those words of yours by my virtue.' The line might easily be mistranslated. Irrita (from rata) feci, 'I made null and void.'

45. Nunc ... abstinei, 'now, since I have kept myself free from unchaste deeds, I wish to keep clear of unchaste words.' abstinei (or abstini) is the archaic form of the perfect of abstineo. The old perfect of teneo was tetini, hence abstini in the compound. For the construction of abstinere in Plautus, see on abstinere manus, 3. 2. 22 supra. So penetrare se, 'to enter,' spernere se, 'to take oneself off,' 'make oneself scarce.' This is a sterling emendation, but contineit from the same mint, 2. 2. 58 supra, rings false.

47. tibi habeas res tuas, the regular formula of divorce. Cf. Lex xii. Tab. Si vir ab uxore divortit uxori res suas sibi habere iubeto eique claveis adimito; Cic. Phil. 2. 28, Mimam illam suam suas res sibi habere iussit ex XII. tabulis; clavis ademît, exegit.

48. iuben is a pyrrhic, as often even before consonants, especially at the beginning of the verse. So viden, abin, satin, dabin, potin, egon, etc., are often pyrrhics even before a consonant.

49. egomet, αὐτή, 'by myself.' pudicitiam. This word must be pronounced as of four syllables, and I think Spengel's view that the first two syllables slurred into one is the most probable (Plaut. p. 84). In Epid. 2. 3, Pudicitiam quisquam sŕiŕae servare filiae, there is, if the MSS. are sound, a necessity for a similar slurring: Goetz reads quis with Bentley. Ussing believes pudicitia was pronounced pudicia: he refers to Merc. 5. 2. 5 for amicitiam, pronounced amĭciam—

Vitam amicitiam civitatem, laetitiam ludum iocum—
and to Pers. 3. 1. 36—

Nón ego inimicitias ómnis pluris aéstumo—for inimicitias pronounced inimicias. Other views, however, are held as to the scansion of these passages. Ussing also refers to sutias, the contracted form for satietas.

50. arbitratu tuo, 1. 1. 105 supra. Amphitruo bids Alcumena dictate the oath, praeire verbis.

51. uxorem, εἰπωμεῖα, Juno really.

54. A graceful line in which the kind and forgiving nature of the true wife is well portrayed.

61. intér eos. The trochaic division of a dactyl is generally limited to a preposition with its case, as inter, propter, and to a trochee at the beginning of a line. in gratiam, 'to friendship,' 'good-will.' Lambinus quotes Ter. Eun. 1. 1. 14, In amore haec omnia insunt vitia, iniuriae Suspiciones inimicitiae induciae Pax bellum rursum.

62. bis tanto amici, 'twice as great friends.' Bis tanto is properly used with comparatives; but, as Ussing points out, it is also used with positive statements. He compares Merc. 293, bis tanto volui quam volui prius.

64. eadem si isdem purgas, 'if you apologise for offences like these in such terms as these, I must put up with them.' This expresses not only forgiveness for the past but for the future. So long as you make such an ample and welcome apology as that you have just made (50-53), I must tolerate your sayings. The late editions with one accord read idem (or suppose isdem to be the same as idem), which gives a weaker sense: 'if you, who have brought the charges, also apologise for them.' It is not the fact that Amphitruo made an apology simply, but that he made such a solemn and satisfactory apology that pleases Alcmena. There is nothing gained, there is something lost by changing isdem. For Ritschl's purigas, see on 3. 2. 28 supra, and Crit. Note on this line.

65. vasa pura: for offering to the gods, infra, 5. 1. 74.

66. apud legionem: if apud is sound, it must be slurred as one syllable; it cannot be treated as a pyrrhic here, that would involve the consecution of dactyl and anapaest. But ad is not unlikely. Cf. Prol. 133 supra; Merc. 1. 3. 2.

71. adeo = autem, 1. 2. 6 supra. ipsus indicates a farther instance of fooling; instead of getting his luncheon he should be befooled himself.

72. atque aperiuntur aedis. Atque is often used in comedy announcing the approach of some new comer on the stage, whose arrival is not unexpected. Here Sosia's arrival was expected, and it was to be expected accordingly that the door would be opened for his approach. Cf. Asin. 1. 2. 19, Atque eccam inlecebra exit tandem; Ibid. 2. 3. 23, Atque hercle ipsum adeo contuor.

ACT III. 3.

Jupiter, in the guise of Amphitruo, gives orders first to Sosia, then to Mercury.

1. assum. Probably the Plautine form for adsum, otherwise one of Plautus's worst puns would be spoilt, Poen. 1. 2. 67, Milphio, heus, ubi es? MI. Assum apud te eccum. AG. At ego elixus sis volo.

2. It is safest to insert Sosia before optume with Leo. But I am very much inclined to think it should be inserted after advenis. Sosia might have fallen out before Sos. iam. This division of the anapaest would be in ordinary words illegitimate, but proper names were to a great extent legibus solutae in respect of these metrical niceties.

3. volup est, 'it is pleasing.' The mss. here give volupe est, but Ritschl (Opusc. 450) will only admit the form volup, which occurs at the end of lines, Asin. Cateria, 1; Cas. 4. 2. 5; Most. 1. 2. 74; Merc. 4. 3. 3. In all the other passages it is in the phrase volup est, which might easily be changed to volupe est, and yet is only so changed here and in Rud. 4. 4. 132 (B); Rud. 4. 1. 1 (C). volup is an adverb, the opposite of aegre. Mil. 3. 1. 152, Si illis aegrest mihi quod volup est.

9. An id ioco. Id is shortened, a short accented monosyllable preceding. vero, 'in sober earnest.'

10. Habui expurigationem, 'I have made an apology.' Habui seems used as in such phrases as habere orationem, 'to deliver a speech,' habere sermonem, habere querelam. It could not mean 'I have received forgiveness,' expurgo being in Plautus invariably used of the accused person clearing himself.

11. vota quae sunt. The antecedent is suppressed, as is common in Plautus. 'I will make an offering within (with those offerings, illis), which I vowed.' See Note on Prol. 106. Brix takes it as a construction κατὰ σύνεσιν, 'I will offer the offerings I vowed.'

censeo, 'I think you had best.' For a play on the different uses of censeo, cf. Rud. 4. 8. 5 seqq :

PL. Censen hodie despondebit eam mihi, quaeso? TR. Censeo.

PL. Quid, patri etiam gratulabor quom illam invenit? TR. Censeo.

PL. Quid, matri eius? TR. Censeo. PL. Quid ergo censes? TR. Quod rogas, Censeo. PL. Dic ergo, quanti censes? TR. Egone? censeo.

PL. Adsum equidem, ne censionem semper facias. TR. Censeo.

PL. Quid si curram? TR. Censeo. PL. An sic potius placide? TR. Censeo.

PL. Etiamne adveniens salutem eam? TR. Censeo. PL. Anne etiam patrem?

TR. Censeo. PL. Post eius matrem? TR. Censeo. PL. Quid postea?

Etiamne adveniens conplectar eius patrem? TR. Non censeo.

PL. Quid, matrem? TR. Non censeo. PL. Quid eampse illam? TR. Non censeo.

PL. Perii, dilectum dimisit: nunc non censet quom volo.

12. verbis meis, 'in my name,' lit. in my words, with a message from me. So Merc. 4. 4. 47; Ter. Hec. 4. 4. 98; Cic. Att. 16. 11. 8, Atticae meis verbis suavium des volo, 'kiss Attica for me.'

15. numquid vis: 1. 3. 46 supra.

16. I sane, 'go, by all means.' quantum potest, ὅσον τάχος, a very common Plautine phrase. Potest is intransitive, as often; quantum potero is also used. Aul. 1. 3. 40, Quantum potero, tantum me recipiam. Cf. Ter. Ad. 3. 50, Quantum potes, abi.

17. faxo ... sit: 2. 1. 44 supra.

19. hisce: Crit. Note. frustra sunt duo, 'are both mistaken.' Cf. the common phrase ne frustra sis; Hor. Sat. 2. 3, ne te frustrere, 'don't make any mistake about it.' In all test passages in Plautus the final -a is short, and ne frustra sis several times ends a verse: Rud. 4. 3. 30; 4. 7. 29; Pers. 1. 3. 60; Men. 4. 3. 18; or, which is the same thing, the first half of a septenarian iambic, Merc. 3. 1. 30.

20. probe, 'they make a proper mistake.' Probe is used like our 'properly' when used as a cant phrase. So probe madulsa, Pseud. 5. 1. 7, 'properly drunk'; tactus probe, Pseud. 5. 2. 13, 'properly swindled.' See on 1. 1. 128. Pulcre is used much the same way.

22. It is best to write tam etsi. See note on Prol. 24.

24. commentus sis. For the elision of s, see 1. 1. 257 supra.

ACT III. 4.

Mercury appears in answer to Jupiter's summons, and announces his intention of taking his stand on the roof and driving Amphitruo off by drenching him from above.

2. ut. There is hiatus at the end of the first half of the verse, as in vs. 17, 21 infra. Several short syllables also are found in this position. These licenses are freely allowed in iambic septenarii and octonarii.

6. me adfero: Prol. 32 supra; Virg. Aen. 3. 310; 8. 477; 3. 346.

7. decedere. Abraham requires de before ria, as in vs. 1, and for this purpose he omits est. De is generally used, and Abraham may be right. Trin. 2. 4. 80, Decedam ego illi de ria de semita.

8. eius dicto imperio sum audiens, 'I am obedient to his hest and will.' Dicto and imperio are separate datives governed by audiens. Ussing explains the construction to be, eius imperio sum dicto audiens, as two lines above, Ego sum Iovi dicto audiens. No doubt dicto audiens became a formula, practically equivalent to obediens, governing another dative, as audiens dicto iussis magistratum, Nep. Ages. 4; Cic. Verr. 2. 5. 32, Syracusani vobis dicto audientes sunt. But here we have an earlier idiom before dicto and audientes have coalesced into a single idea, and where dicto is governed by audiens; just so imperiiis is governed by audiens, Truc. 123, tibi servio atque audiens sum imperiiis, and here imperio is added to dicto without a copula, the absence of which is characteristic of ancient Latin as we have seen, especially of ancient formulae, Prol. 13; 1. 1. 39 supra. And no doubt dicto, imperio audientem esse was the full phrase of which dicto audientem esse was a shortened and later form. Plautus uses dicto audiens for dicto obediens, Pers. 3. 1. 71, As. 3. 1. 40.

13. modo ... bono, 'with due moderation.'

16. coronam. The garlands worn by banqueters are often referred to. Hor. Sat. 2. 3. 256, potus ut ille (Polemon) Dicitur ex collo furtim carpsisse coronas.

17. escendero. The preposition e seems to have been specially used in compounds denoting climbing or soaring. Erehi is 'to soar'; eluctari, 'to struggle up'; erepere, 'to crawl up,' Hor. Sat. 1. 5. 79.

illuc sursum, he points to the roof.

23. siquidem here, but sīquidem is sometimes the scansion ; in which case it is perhaps best to write it sī quidem. The first syllable of siquidem is short in the best age. Brix denies the shortening of the first syllable in Plautus, Mil. 1. 1. 28, but it was admitted by Ritschl. Siquidem is often, though not here, demanded by Luchs's theory that quidem never has the accent on its first syllable save in the first foot.

24. ornatum, 'dress,' 'get up.' Mil. 4. 4. 67, ornatu ihalassico, 'a sailor's dress.' qui potis decet, 'suitable for drunken men.' Decet governs a dative in old Latin. Cf. generi, 2. 2. 188 supra ; ut decet lenonis familiae, Pers. 2. 2. 31 ; ut vobis decet, Ter. Ad. 3. 4. 45 ; 5. 8. 5 ; Lucr. 1. 885.

ACT IV. 1.

Amphitruo returns after a vain hunt after Naucrates. He finds his house-door locked.

1. Naucratem quem ... erat, a well-known attraction of a nominative to the accusative of the relative. Virg. Aen. 1. 573, Urbem, quam statuo vestra est ; Curc. 3. 49, Istum quem quaeris ego sum.

3. plateas, 'squares'; πλατεῖα, platea, hence place. perreptavi, 'crawled through'; the expression denotes slow wearisome toil. Ter. Ad. 4. 6. 3, perreptari usque omne oppidum. myropolia: the shops of the retailers of perfumery are mentioned by Lys. de Invalid. 20, quoted by Ussing, as one of the haunts of idle men, along with a barber's shop and a shoemaker's shop.

4. emporium, 'the bazaar,' a general term for the business part of the town. macello, 'the meat market.' medicinis, 'doctors' shops': the termination has the same force as in officina. tonstrinae; barbers' shops were the most usual haunt of men about town. Hor. Sat. 1. 7. 3, Omnibus et lippis notum et tonsoribus esse ; Asin. 2. 2. 76, Verum in tonstrina ut sedebam infit me percontarier. In Epid. 2. 2. 13 sqq., nearly the same catalogue of places is given :—

Per medicinas, per tonstrinas, in gymnasio atque in foro, Per myropolia et lanienas circumque argentarias.

Catullus thus describes (55) how he sought his friend :—

Te quaesivimus in minore Campo, Te in Circo, te in omnibus libellis,
Te in templo superi Iovis sacrato
In Magni simul ambulatione.

7. pergam exquirere. Cf. pergam exequi, 2. 2. 169.

8. compleverit, perhaps ‘tainted,’ ‘stained,’ like the Greek ἀναμιπλάναι, ‘to infect,’ Plat. Apol. 32 (D). So implere, Liv. 4. 30.

9. amittere, ‘let go,’ ‘dismiss.’

10. mortuom satiust, sc. esse. Cf. Cas. 1. 1. 24, hercle me suspendio Quam tu eius potior fias satiust mortuom. aedis occluserunt, the door of the house was left unlocked, unbarred, during the day, surely not open, as Ussing says. Most. 2. 2. 14, Sed quid hoc? occlusa ianuast interdus. occludere was the regular word for barring the door on the inside, Aul. 1. 2. 25, occlude sis Fores ambobus pessulis. See Mr. Martley, Hermathena, 8. 303, Sonnenschein on Most. 1. 1. eugepae (probably the exclamations εὐγε and παπαί combined and contracted), an exclamation of wonder and satisfaction combined, though often the satisfaction is ironical as here. This ironical application of the word is found Capt. 4. 2. 43, Capt. 2. 2. 24, Rud. 2. 4. 24: without irony, Pseud. 1. 2. 81.

12. The second ecquis is a pyrrhic here, as in other passages; but the ordinary scansion is also common. q seems to have had a shortening effect on a syllable ending in c. So hic quidem or hiquidem in Plautus always.

ACT IV. 2.

A dialogue between Amphytruo, knocking at the house door, and Mercury, who is on the roof, interrupted, magno litterarum damno, at vs. 14, by the loss of several leaves of the archetype.

1. ad is shortened like id, 3. 3. 9 supra, by the influence of the metrical accent on Quis. Quid ego sum? "What do you mean by 'it's I'?" It was customary to repeat the very words of a speaker when they appeared surprising, with the interrogative Quid? Ussing and Mueller (Plaut. Pros. p. 176) have collected a large number of instances. Truc. 256, Ego sum, respice ad me. St. Quid ego? Bacch. 145, cave malo. Ly. Quid cave malo? Rud. 736, oportet esse liberas. L. Quid liberas? So Merc. 304. 684, Cas. 2. 8. 17, 3. 51; Epid. 3. 4. 53, etc.

4. Quo modo? 'What do you mean?' an expression of surprise and indignation, like quid est, 2. 1. 6 supra. aetatem, 'all your life.'

5. Ita, 'yes, I'm Sosia.' So ita is often used. at: at conveys a threat, 'do you dare to ask'; an would be weaker, a mere inquiry. etiam, 'actually,' 1. 1. 222 supra.

7. publicitus, 'at the public expense,' δημοσίᾳ. Doors in college rooms are supplied publicitus; hence, perhaps, it is that the knocker is so often dispensed with, or is removed by friendly interposition.

8. quid me aspectas, stolidē, "come, sir, don't sit scowling at me, or I'll brain you with the decanter"—Thackeray, A Shabby Genteel Story; the insolent language being used there as here, ultra, by the wrong-doer. quid vis tibi? a ruder and sharper form of expression than quid vis?

9. ulmorum Acheruns, 'death-bed of rods,' because so many rods were broken in flogging him. Capt. 3. 4. 117, Vae illis virgis miseris quae hodie in tergo morientur meo. Acheruns: the first syllable was regularly long in Plautus: see Sonnen-schein's Excursus on Most. 2. 2. 77. The first syllable is once shortened owing to metrical accent, Poen. 4. 2. 9. ulmorum: elm rods were used in flogging, and are often referred to in Plautus: the ancient birch.

10. faciam ferventem, 'I'll warm you.' flagris, more commonly flagellis, 'the scourge.'

12. senecta was originally a participle, and here keeps its participial construction. So Lucr. 3. 772, membris senectis; Ibid. 886 and 896, aetate senecta; see Munro's note. He quotes aetate iuventa from Mommsen, Inscr. Neap. 3833, and apparently regards senecta iuventa as participles from senesco, iuvenesco, comparing cretus, concretus, suetus, etc.

mendicas malum, 'you beg a thrashing.' Mendicare malum is joker's license for the ordinary malum quaerere.

13. Cum cruciatu, 2. 2. 161 supra. verna, 'house-drudge.' The word is used here evidently as a term of abuse. Cf. the remark of Nonius, quoted on 1. 1. 26. The assonance of verna and verba is intentional. See 1. 1. 26. funditas, used with some contempt: cf. futilis, 'chattering.'

14. Qui, 'how so,' like quomodo, vs. 4 supra, quidum, vs. 12 supra. macto infortunio, 'because I offer you a holocaust of misery.' Mactare, connected with the root mag-, meant augere, to increase, enrich, bless, and was especially used of sacrificing to, and honouring the gods with sacrifices. Cf. Cic. Vat. 6. 17, mactare Manes extis puerorum; Ennius Ann. 260 (Mueller), Livius inde redit magno mactatus triumpho. Another root (macere), having the meaning 'to strike,' seems to have been confounded with this word. Cf. Lucr. 5. 1339, boves ferro male mactae. The ironical use of mactare is not uncommon; it is often joined with malo, damno, infortunio. See Munro's note on Lucr. L. L., and Conington's Excursus on macte, Aen. 9. 641.

The Fragments have been sufficiently commented on in the Critical Notes.

ACT IV. 3.

Blepharo, who has been chosen arbitrator to decide which is the real Amphitruo, declares himself unable to decide. Amphitruo, almost beside himself with rage, determines to break into his house and make a promiscuous slaughter of its inmates.

1. Vos inter vos vos partite, 'divide yourselves 'twixt yourselves,' i.e. decide for yourselves, which is the real Amphitruo. Sosia, in Molière's Amphitryon, decides that Jupiter is the real Amphitryon, for the simple reason that he, Jupiter, asks Naucrates and Polidas to dinner:—

Je ne me trompais pas, messieurs ; ce mot termine Toute l'irrésolution ;
Le véritable Amphitryon
Est l'Amphitryon où l'on dine.

It is from this passage Amphitryon has derived its meaning of host in English. For partio instead of partior, see 3. 2. 3.

2. Neque ego. Ussing says a verse is wanting, for otherwise quo neque referatur desideramus. He is quite wrong, and the text is quite right. Neque was used in colloquial Latin after a positive statement, not as containing another alternative negative, but as adding a new negative statement, which confirms what has been previously said. See note on neque, 1. 1. 119. Cf. Most. 3. 1. 71 :—

Ultrō te ! neque ego tætriorem beluam
Vidisse me unquam quemquam quam te censeo.

3. adsis, 'stand by me.'

8. regem: Creon, King of Thebes, whose general Amphitruo was. recta (sc. via) is common. me ducam, 'betake myself,' a colloquialism. Ussing quotes Bacch. 588, duc te ab aedibus; Ter. Hec. 522, duxit se foras; Pollio ad Cic. Fam. 10. 32. 1, Balbus duxit se a Gadibus.

9. Thessalum veneficum. The Thessalians were famous for their witchcraft. Hor. Carm. 1. 27. 21, Quis te solvere Thessalis Magus venenis, quis poterit deus? Juv. 6. 611; Lucan, Phars. 6. 614, 519; Hor. Epod. 5. 45.

10. pervorse perturbavit, 'turned topsy-turvy.'

12. alter. We would not use 'other' in English, therein differing from both Latin and Greek idiom. Alius, rursus, iterum are often superfluous in Latin diction. Hor. Sat. 1. 4. 102, si quid promittere de me possum aliud vere; Virg. Aen. 10. 27, where see Henry's note.

13. ludificant ut lubet, 'fool to the top of their bent.'

14. certumst, intro rumpam, 'I have made up my mind, I will break in,' is just as good Latin as certumst introrumpere, just as vir bonus est credo is as good Latin as virum bonum esse credo. hominem, 'human creature.' 2. 2. 137 supra.

ACT V. 1.

A thunderstorm comes on, and Amphitruo falls speechless, affected by the lightning, at the entrance of the house. The maid-servant, Bromia, comes out in terror, tells of the marvels happening within, and finding her master lying senseless rouses him. She then narrates to him the miracles she has witnessed.

2. confidentia. For the short vowel see 3. 4. 1 supra; cf. vss. 3, 17 infra.

3. consequi, 'to make it their object.' The object is expressed in the words which follow, ut opprimar, ut enicer. See Note on 1. 2. 25 supra.

6. animo malest, 'I feel faint': 2. 2. 92 supra. aquam velim. The passages quoted in the Crit. Note are Curc. 1. 3. 3, Mane subfundam aquolam (of pouring water on wooden hinges to keep them from creaking); Cist. 2. 3. 37, Obsipat aquolam, 'she sprinkles water on me.'

8. videatur. See Crit. Note. For the potential compare Aul. 3. 6. 13, Non potem ego quidem; and the Horatian references given in note on 2. 1. 28. But the sense 'nor can any woman seem more miserable' is so weak that I am only kept back from reading viduor by meeting an equally weak passage in the Greek Comic Frag. (Kock, vol. 3. p. 437):

γνώμη γὰρ οὐδέν ἐστιν, ἡ τύχη δὲ πᾶν ἦς ἡδὺς ὁ τυχὼν ἔστι καὶ νομίζεται.

9. ita, i.e. no wonder I feel frightened, such miracles have happened to my mistress. sibi is elided before invoat; so 5. 2. 1. tibi is elided before et. This elision of tibi is fairly proved by Buecheler, Decl. Lat. p. 113, and accepted by Leo. Leo hints this may point to some archaic form of the dative; comparing the genitive tis for tui. He adds to the passages quoted by Buecheler, Curc. 271; Capt. 558, 572; Poen. 5. 2. 95; Cist. 2. 1. 33; Men. 738, 827. (Hermes 18, p. 584 seqq.). There can be no doubt of the fact of this elision, which is frequent in both Terence and Plautus.

10. strepitus ... tonuit. By changing propere to prope, a more suitable word in every way, we get an anapaestic octonarius, not hypercatalectic, as in the ordinary reading. The student must not be deterred by the shortening of ut before valide. This shortening of syllables, usually long, is one of the two peculiarities of Latin comic anapaestic metre; the other is the free use of synizesis. See an instance of this shortening in the Note on l. 1. 11 supra, where Spengel's reading, opulénto homini hoc servitus durast, is adopted. These two licenses are the result of the forced accentuation of anapaestic verses.

14. surgite. The thought and inspiration of these fine trochaics was evidently caught from the Bacchae of Euripides, which, as we have seen, was imitated by the author before (l. 1. 203 supra), 594 seqq.:

βάρβαροι γυναῖκες οὕτως ἐκπεπληγμένοι φόβῳ πρὸς πέδῳ πεπτώκατ' ; ἤσθησθ', ὥς εἶκε Βακχίου διατιναζάντος τὰ Πένθεως δώματ'· ἀλλ' ἀνίστατε σῶμα καὶ θαρσεῖτε, σαρκὸς ἐξαμειψάσαι τρόμον.

15. ut iacui, 'having fallen down.' Ut is used just the same way, l. 1. 175 supra, Lassus sum hercle e navi, ut vectus huc sum; etiam nunc nauseo, where it is a mistake to translate ut 'since.' Ut rather means 'in accordance with the fact,' and so ut iacui, ut vectus sum, are equivalent to participles, 'having fallen down,' 'having come here by ship.' For the metre see Crit. Note, and for similar numeri continuati see Bacch. 4. 8. 47 (quoted by Ussing, Prolog. p. 186):

Nunc alteris etiám ducentis úsus est qui dispensentur
Ilio capto út sit mulsum qui triumphant milites.

16. There is something awkward in this line, and possibly the reading is not cleared up. If etsi were read for iam the verse would run smoothly, but etsi is far from the mss. Perhaps the following arrangement would suit:—

Ibi me inclamat Alcumena : "i"! mea res me horrore adficit :
Erilis praevertit metus.

'Alcumena calls me, "Come!" my own concern (i.e. the alarm she was in, owing to the speech of the god, and the apparently burning house) appals me; (but) my fear of (not for) my lady gets the better of it.'

20. Trochaic tetram. cat. senex. Amphitruo probably presented himself to the mind of the author as about the age of a Roman consul, somewhere about 48 or 50. hic: short, as nearly always in Plautus. See on l. 1. 146.

23. Iambic octonarian according to the reading in the text, allowing hiatus with Amphitruo, as in 2. 2. 194 supra, vs. 28 infra. hic quidem: hic before quidem is short: see l. 1. 263 supra. Other arrangements of the latter clause are:—

- (1) Goetz following Kiessling:

Amphitruo hic est quidem érus meus.

- (2) Ussing following Fleckeisen:

Est Ámphitruo hic quidem érus meus.

Against this, at first sight the best arrangement, is Luchs's view, that hic is invariably short when it precedes quidem = hiquidem.

- (3) Amphitruost hiquidem méus erus (Brix);

- (4) Atque Ámphitruo híquidemst érus meus;

or,

- (5) Atque híquidem Amphitruost érus meus (Luchs).

These five scansions make the clause iambic. Spengel scans it as trochaic:—

- (6) Ámphitruo hic quidemst érus meus.

25. Tua Bromia ancilla. Brix and Ussing point out that this was the usual order. They compare meus Mnesilochus filius, Bacch. 342, 823; tuum Stalagmum servom, Capt. 868; Cas. 711, nostro Olympioni vilico; Cist. 374, mei Lampadisci servi; Poen. 170, tuos Collabiscus vilicus; Cic. Cluent. 8. 25, eius Luciam filiam; Arch. 3. 6, eius Pio filio; Brut. 26. 98, cuius Caio filio. Bromia. The ancients gave very fanciful names to their housemaids. Whether Bromia is directly derived from βρέμω, and denotes that the owner of the name was generally a bustling, noisy creature, or made a great fuss on this particular occasion, or derived from Βρόμιος, one of the names of Bacchus, and denoted her vinose proclivities, is impossible to say.

27. impulit, 'smote us.'

28. Amphitruo. There is hiatus after Amphitruo here, as 2. 2. 194, 5. 1. 23 supra.

29. sartam mentem, 'a whole mind.' Sartus, from sarcio, meant 'repaired,' 'in a state of repair'; hence the phrase sarta tecta exigere, to see that all edifices are in a state of repair, and properly roofed, which was the business of the aediles. We talk in English of a person 'having a slate off' when he is a little crazed. The idea is the same in sartam.^{*} For a fine metaphorical use of sarta tecta cf. Trin. 2. 2. 36 :

Sarta tecta tua praecepta usque habui mea modestia.

30. etiam nunc, 'once more,' μᾶλ' αὖθις.

33. tu idem : idem, as often used of a change in the same person : of inconsistency.

40. puerperae is nominative to solent, not dative after it. Ussing was the first to point out the true construction, which is sufficiently obvious. Cf. vs. 9 supra.

42. capite operto. In solemn prayers to the gods the Romans covered their heads. Hor. Sat. 2. 3. 37, cum vellem mittere operto Me capite in flumen, of a person about to devote himself to death. The custom was emblematic of the unseen world, and in it appears the more spiritual nature of the Romans.

45. absolvito, properly 'pay me off,' then 'let me go,' 'dismiss me.' Most. 3. 2. 151, omnino ut te absolvam, nullam pictam conspicio hic avem ; Epid. 3. 4. 30, te absolvam brevi.

47. quisquam, if masc., is used as a general expression ; but quisquam in the old drama was often used with feminines, even in the accusative quemquam (Rud. 2. 3. 75, anum quemquam, Most. 3. 1. 78, beluam quemquam), so also quis, quisque, quisquis, and quispiam. See Brix's note on Trin. 2. 4. 8. quis seems to have been originally of only two terminations.

52. incunabulis, 'swaddling clothes' (σπάργανα) tied tightly round the new-born babe. Truc. 892, Fasciis opus est pulvinis, cunis, incunabulis. colligare, ἐντυλίσσειν.

54. non metuo, equivalent to non dubito, hence quin.

56. iubati, 'crested snakes,' a fabulous invention according to Pliny, 11. 122 (quoted by Ussing), but often mentioned as prodigious, Liv. 13. 4, Virg. Aen. 2. 206, Eur. Phoen. 206 (Ussing).

^{*} Mr. Purser suggests siccam in preference to sartam. This is an excellent conjecture, and suits saccam of B as well or better than sartam ; but sarcam of D seems to me to be clearly sartam. Mr. Purser remarks that siccus is often joined with sanus : as Afr. 61 (Ribb.) sicca, sana, sobria : Cic. de opt. gen. orat. 3, sanis et siccis. Id. Brut. 202 ; cf. Sen. Ep. 114. 3. Cic. Acad. 2. ap. Non. p. 394. Still I prefer sartam, as suiting the tradition of the mss. sarcam, saccam better, and I am not quite sure of this use of siccus applied to mens.

inpluvium. Here the tank in the floor into which the rain-water fell. The term is also applied to the opening in the roof through which the rain came. Mil. 2. 2. 4. Cf. Ter. Phorm. 4. 4. 26, Anguis per inpluvium decedit de tegulis.

58. sed, resumptive, like 'well' in English.

60. recessim, 'retreating backwards.' The word is applied to the motion of a crab, Cas. 2. 8. 8, Recessim cedam ad parietem : imitabor nepam. For the form cf. exultim, sensim, tractim, ductim, expulsim, etc. ursum vorum, 'backwards': vorum, 'towards,' is superfluous, for ursum by itself is re-vorum. Ursum or urum is the older form of ursus, and vorum is the older form of versus, 'towards.' Cf. Epid. 245, Coepi ursum vorum ad illas pauxillatim accedere. Ter. Hec. 3. 1. 11, ursum prorsum is 'backwards and forwards'; sursum deorsum, 'up and down'; ultro citroque, or retro citroque, is 'backwards and forwards.' None of these phrases should be confounded with ursum vorum. Parallel to it is sursum vorum, Capt. 3. 4. 124.

66. percipit, 'seizes.' The word is used of mental emotions or maladies which seize the whole frame (per). Cf. Merc. 5. 5. 22, priusquam percipit insania; Stich. 2. 2. 17, medullam ventris percepit fames.

68. exclamat, 'calls out the name of.' Ussing quotes Cic. Phil. 2. 12. 30, M. Brutus, quem ego honoris causa nomino, cruentum pugionem tenens Ciceronem exclamarit.

70. consuetum, 'had consorted.' Cf. consuetio, 1. 2. 28. cubitibus: ablative of cubitus, fourth declension.

71. Pol me haud paenitet, 'I have nothing to complain of,' 'I am satisfied.' Paenitet often denotes dissatisfaction; Stich. 4. 1. 44, Si duarum paenitebit, addentur duae; Ter. Phorm. 1. 3. 20, Ita plerique ingenio sumus omnes, nostri nosmet paenitet. It is like the Homeric ἐνομαι, οἴνεσθε, 'I am dissatisfied,' 'are you not content?'

72. dimidium dividere: he does not divide the half, he divides all the good. The Latin idiom is often proleptic like the Greek. Aul. 4. 10. 37, dimidiam tecum potius partem dividam. See on 4. 3. 12 supra.

73. Scaliger's suggestion scilicet—me dividere means: 'you may be sure I will divide,' 'of course I will divide.' Scilicet like fortasse (see on 2. 1. 76) often takes an accusative and infinitive after it in Plautus, its derivation, scire-licet, not yet being obscured. Asin. 4. 1. 42, ita scilicet facturam: 'of course she will do so.' Curc. 2. 2. 13, item alios deos facturos scilicet: "you may be sure the other gods will do the same." Rud. 2. 3. 64, cum navi scilicet abiisse pessum in altum: "you may be quite sure he and his ship have gone to the bottom." So Lucret. 2. 809, scilicet esse globosa. The same construction of videlicet is sometimes found in Plautus and Terence, as Stich. 4. 1. 52, videlicet fuisse illum nequam adulescentem: this construction also appears in Lucretius, 1. 210, esse videlicet in terris primordia rerum, and in Cicero's Letters, Att. 5. 11. 7, tum videlicet datas. See Tyrrell's note on this passage and on Quint. Fr. 2. 6, and Munro's notes on the Lucretian passage.

76. coniectorem, 'the seer,' 'the diviner.' Conicere is the regular word for interpreting, explaining the portent of a prodigy. Curc. 2. 1. 30 seqq.:

Potin coniecturam facere, si narrem tibi

Hac nocte quod ego somniavi dormiens?

PA. Vah! solus hic homost qui sciat divinitus.

ACT V. 2.

Jupiter appears in his own form, and appeases Amphitruo.

1. tibi et tuis. tibi is elided, see Note on 5. 1. 9 supra.

4. multo adeo melius: adeo is intensive, 'yes and much better,' 'a great deal better.' See on 2. 2. 46 supra. Adeo is joined to multus even in Virgil, Georg. 1. 94; 1. 287, 'let me tell you,' with emphasis. quom sum Iuppiter: the indicative is often used with quom in Plautus, when an undeniable patent fact is alleged as a reason for anything, so qui, Prol. 30 supra.

5. usuram, 'loan.' Cf. usuraria, Arg. 1. 3 supra.

7. quom in exercitum: monosyllable unelided and shortened in resolved arsis, as commonly.

8. I read duos with Lindemann to avoid consecution of dactyl and anapaest: I doubt whether duo can be an iambus.

9, 10. Quite grand in their simplicity.

11. in gratiam redi, 'make up friends again,' 3. 2. 61 supra.

12. haud promeruit quam ob rem vitio vorteres, 'she has done nothing to deserve your blame.' Hor. Sat. 1. 6. 85, nec timuit sibi ne quis verteret. Vitio, a predicative or double dative, like laudi.

15. In all the plays of Terence, ω is prefixed to plaudite, both in the Bembine and other mss. ω is supposed to denote the last speaker, the characters being designated by the letters of the alphabet in the order they appeared on the stage. In none of the plays of Plautus is this mark preserved save in the Trinummus, before the final word plaulite. Wherever it is possible to separate the final address to the spectators from the preceding words, Ussing would insert this ω , but he leaves the question open whether the final address was spoken by the actor, or by a person distinct from the actor called Cantor. Hor. A. P. 155 has the well-known words, this, joined with the fact of the mark ω being found, makes it probable that the cantor, who had accompanied the cantica in the play, intoned plaudite. But for the testimony of Horace it would be more natural to suppose that Ω meant merely the last word or words in the play, equivalent to our Finis.

NOTE.—This collection of Spengel's includes the less obvious metres only.

The reader will have little difficulty for the most part in making out the intended scansion from the accentuation and Spengel's own marginal notes. As for the rest, the following notes are needful:—

APPENDIX II.

ASINARIA, Prol. 14.

Ridícula res est : dáte benignam operám mihi.
Ut vós item alias, páriter nunc Mars ádiuvet.

Ita vós, ut alias, páriter nunc Mars ádiuvet.

or utei alias. ita regularly declares the terms on which a blessing is pronounced. The phrases ita di ament, ita di adiuvent are very common.

ASINARIA, 2. 2. 64 seqq.

LIB. Tým igitur tu díues factus? LEO. Mítte ridiculária.

LIB. Mitto : istuc quod adfers aures expectant meae.

The second line being a whole foot short, we should obviously write :

Mítto : istuc, istúc, quod adfers, aúres expectánt meae.

The repetition of istuc expresses the eagerness of Libanus. So Ar. Nub. 657 : ἐκεῖν', ἐκεῖνο, τὸν ἀδικώτατον λόγον. Vesp. 1200 : ἐκεῖν, ἐκεῖν', ἀνδρειότατον γε τῶν ἐμῶν.

ASINARIA, 5. 2. 91.

ART. I domum. PHIL. Da sáviũ etiam priũs quam abis.

DEM. I in crucem.

PHIL. Immo intus potiũs : sequere hac me, mí anime. ARG.

Ego veró sequor.

The scansion of the end of the first line is usually set right by reading abitis with Bothe and Seyffert. It is much simpler to read in in crucem, i.e. isne in crucem. Cf. Merc. 1. 2. 72 : In hinc dierectus! 'Get away to perdition!' This prepares for the retort in the next line which surely ran :

Immo in tu potiũs : sequere hac me, mí anime. ARG. Ego veró sequor.

In tu very naturally was corrupted into intus. ire intro is Latin, not ire intus.

CAPTIVI, Prol. 10. 11.

Negat hercle ille ultimus : accedito.

A word, and that a long word, must have fallen out in the second line after ultimus. That that word was exaudire is rendered extremely probable by Epid. 2. 2. 55 and 63, Nec satis exaudiebam...coepi accedere : by Merc. 4. 3. 8, 9, exaudire hinc non queo : Accedam propius. Such a scansion would not be allowable in Plautus's own Iambics as making an anapaest out of the last two syllables of ultimus and the first of exaudire ; but the Prologue writer in this respect did not attain Plautus's rule : see note on Amph. Prol. 55, omnibus isdem versibus.

CURCULIO, 2. 3. 9.

Tum ísti Graeci pálliati cápite operto qui ámbulant,

Qui incedunt suffarcinati cum libris cum sportulis,

Constant conserunt sermones inter sese drapetae :

Obstant, obsistunt, incedunt cum suis sententiis :

Quos semper videas bibentes esse in thermopolio :

Ubi quid subrupuere operto capitulo calidum bibunt,

Tristes atque ebrioli incedunt, eos ego nunc si offendero,

Ex unoquoque eorum excutiam crepitum polentarium.

Bibentes esse is strange Latin, and the fifth verse is enclosed in brackets by Ussing. Goetz brackets the sixth verse, and gives libentes esse with E, a very inferior and corrected ms. I suggest to keep bibentes of B, and to read :

Quos semper videas bibentes asse in thermopolio,

‘ You may see these poverty-stricken philosophers drinking in the taverns at the cheapest rate.’ Cf. Varro, Sat. Men. p. 171, Riese : asse vinum, asse pulmentarium. Lucil. 5. 30 (Müll.) asse duas ficos. Mart. 9. 60. 22 : Asse duos calices. Id. 1. 104. 9 : Et Veientani bibitur faex crassa rubelli ; Asse cicer tepidum constat et asse Venus. Sen. Ep. 94. 27 : quod non opus est asse carum est. A sign over a thermopolium, C. L. I. 4. 1679, ASSIBUS HIC BIBITUR.

CASINA, Prol. 20.

Qui nunc abierunt hinc in communem locum.
Sed tamen absentes prosunt praesentibus.

Prae has naturally fallen out before praesentibus. Read :

Sed tamen absentes prosunt PRAE praesentibus.

We thus get a striking and true sentiment. The absent poets, the dead, are better than the present, the living. The line is variously emended. Weise transposes absentes and tamen : Geppert gives et before praesentibus : Ussing reads pro praesentibus.

BACCHIDES, 2. 3. 45.

Forte ut adsedi in stega,
Dum circumspecto atque ego lembum cōspicor
Longum est rigorem maleficum exornarier.

Longum st B. longum est C D.—strigorem Goetz, with Dacier: a reading founded on Festus, p. 314, who explains strigores as densarum virium homines. I suspect that gloss is founded on the ms. corruption of this passage, and suggest :

atque ego lembum cōspicor
Longum, triremem, maleficum exornarier,

‘ I saw a long, three-banked, rascally, piratical galley being got ready for sea.’ The t of triremem became united to longum, giving rise to longumst: rirem lost one -em, and became rirem, corrected to rigorem. The ships of war in ancient times were long (μακράι), opposed to the tubby merchant vessels (στρογγύλαι). Ussing reads trygonem, from Gertz's emendation, comparing the galley to the sting-ray. The lembus was usually a small skiff; but there was a kind of lambi used in war. Curt. Ruf. speaks of piratici lambi: Livy, 24. 40, tells of lambi biremes, and although we do not read of lambi triremes, the exaggeration suits the invention of the slave.

BACCHIDES, 3. 1. 16.

Dé me hanc culpam démolibor ét seni faciám palam,
Ut eum ex lutulento coeno propere hic eliciat foras.

The second line is unmetrical. Ussing supplies ille before eum. Goetz reads gnatum with Ritschl. Better, I think, to read:

Ut suem ex lutulento coeno propere hinc eliciat foras.

Compare Horace Ep. 1. 2. 26, Vixisset canis immundus vel amica luto sus: Cicero in Sallust. 272, Itaque nihil aliud studet nisi ut lutulentus sus cum quovis volutari: Varro, Prometheus Liber, Frag. 12 (Oehler), in tenebris ac suili vivunt: nisi non forum hara, atque homines, qui nunc plerique, sues sunt existimandi.

BACCHIDES, 4. 4. 73.

Eúax, nimis bellus átque ut esse máxime optabám locus.

After exclamations like eu, em, edepol, euax, Plautus uses the accusative, not the nominative. Read therefore bellum ... locum, which at once sets the metre right.

CURCULIO, 1. 3. 4.

Eápse merum condídicit bibere: fóribus dat aquam quámbibant.

The syllable -at of the present indicative, being the result of a contraction for aít, was originally long, and is generally long in Plautus. Ritschl, Prolog. Trin. p. 185, doubts however whether dat was ever lengthened. I doubt whether dat was ever shortened in Plautus. There are only two passages, save in Arguments and Prologues, where it is short. This passage is one of them. It should read thus:

foribus dát, aqúam bibant.

For the omission of ut see note on Amph. Prol. 12.

The other rebellious passage is Rud. 4. 4. 28:

Vérba dat: hoc modó res gestast, út ego dico. Quid tu ais?

The true reading is:

Vérba dat: haec módo res gestast, út ego dico, etc.

'Modo' 'lately' was mistaken for the noun, and caused the change of haec to hoc (hoc módo, Mueller).

CURCULIO, 5. 2. 3 seqq.

PHAED. Téneo: quid negótist? PLAN. Rogita, unde ístunc habeat ánulum.

Páter istum meus géstitavit. CURC. † At mea matértera.

PLAN. Máter ei utendum déderat. CURC. † Pater uo is risúm tibi.

PLANESIUM. Nugas garris.

In the first place, we should read 'at meí matertera,' 'My father used to wear it,' says Planesium; 'but my father's aunt,' retorts Curculio. This is simpler than any of the proposed changes.

All the corrections of the third verse which I have seen wander very far from the MS. reading which I print above.

We should read, I think, Pater avo: is rusum tibi: 'My mother lent it to my father,' says Planesium. Curculio ironically retorts: 'and your father lent it to your grandfather; he in his turn passed it on to you.' To which non-sensical speech Planesium naturally replies, Nugas garris.

EPIDICUS, 5. 1. 21.

† Di immortales scio iussi admirer pedibus pulmunes

Qui perhibetur prius venisset quam tu advenisti mihi!

Editors have tried to get too much out of these lines. There is nothing more in them than a sarcastic statement that the winged-footed Mercury would have come faster than the Danista; although the first line is corrupt in no less than four words, it does not go very far from the true reading, which I believe is :

Di immortales, si Iovis iussu ad me iret pedibus, plúmipes
Qui perhibetur, prius venisset quam tu advenisti mihi !

Iovis iussu is used no less than four times in the Amphitruo of the errands of Mercury. For plumipes cf. Catullus, 55. 19 :

Adde huc plumipedes volatilesque, where Ellis takes plumipedes to refer chiefly to the πτερόπους Ἑρμῆς.

It might be better to take si as = utinam, and put a stop at perhibetur. "I wish it had been the winged Mercury that had been sent to me : he would have come sooner than you !"

The passage just corrected may give some light towards restoring a very corrupt place in MENAECHMI, 2. 3. 78.

MEN. Ehó, Messenio, húc accede. MES. Quid negoti est ?

MEN. †Sussciri.

MESS. Quid eo opust ? MEN. Opus est †scio ut me dicas.

MESS. Tanto nequior.

Menaechmus, elated at receiving a strange lady's invitation, here, I think, tells his slave in exaggerated language that he feels himself a god, a Jupiter. In the second of these lines, we should, I think, read :

MESS. Quid eo opust ? MEN. Opust, Iovem ut me dicas.

The cases of Iuppiter are peculiarly liable to corruption : iouē is a strange word (see Hermathena, vol. iv. p. 449) : here it borrows sc from st preceding, and loses uē before ut. The following passages bear out the sense I put on the line : Curc. 1. 3. 11, PHAED. Est lepida. PALIN. Nimis lepida. PHAED. Sum deus. PALIN. Immo homo haud magni preti. Capt. 4. 2. 82, iube ... agnum adferri propere pinguem. HEG. Cur ? ERG. Ut sacrifices. HEG. Quoi deorum ? ERG. Mihi hercle ; nam ego nunc tibi sum summus Iuppiter. Pseud. 1. 3. 92, Pseudole, arcesse hostias, victumas, lanios ut ego huic sacrificem summo Ioui : Nam hic mihi nunc est multo potior Iuppiter quam Iuppiter. These passages seem to me clearly to show that Iouem must come in here. What to make of sussciri I know not : for tus fer, i which I suggested cannot stand, as i, as Professor Tyrrell pointed out to me, invariably precedes the second imperative ; as i, gladium adfer.

MENAECCHI, 5. 4. 4 seqq.

SEN. Quin ěa te causa dũco ut id dicās mihi Atque illum ut sanum fácias. MED. Perfacile id quidemst.
†Quin suspirabo plus sescenta in dies.

The father-in-law of Menaechmus calls in a doctor to cure his supposed son-in-law, Menaechmus of Syracuse, of insanity. The last line, in my opinion, should run :

Quin sũbus piabo plũs sescentis ĩn dies,

‘I will lay his evil spirit with six hundred hogs every day.’
The sacrifice of a hog was a cure for insanity, and although the word used seems to have been invariably porcus, yet the use of the term sues, denoting the full-grown animal, seems in keeping with the absurd comic exaggeration of the passage. The insane person was in such cases said piari. Men. 2. 2. 14:

MEN. Responde mihi,

Adulescens, quibus hic pretiis porci veneunt, Sacres, sinceri? CYL. Nummis. MEN. Nummum a me accipe :

Iube te piari de mea pecunia.

So Men. 3. 2. 51 :

Aut te iubes piari, homo insanissume.

Compare Tyrrell’s conjecture, Mil. Glor. 2. 6. 106 seqq., and see Crit. Note on Amph. Frag. 10.

MOSTELLARIA, 4. 3. 18.

THER. Minás quadraginta ácepesti, quás sciam,
A Philolachete. SIMO. Numquam nummum, quod sciam.

It is obvious that quas sciam cannot stand, and it has been altered with one consent to quod sciam. But the true reading is quaspiam. C, an excellent ms., has quasciam, differing only by one letter : that change of letter was caused by sciam underneath: 'you received some forty minae from Philolaches.' 'Not a penny, as far as I know.' Cf. Pseud. 1. 5. 69, Ecquas viginti minas ... Paritas ut a me auferas?

PERSA, 3. 3. 30.

Ubi quid credideris, citius extemplo á foro
Fugiunt, quam ex porta ludis quom emissust lepus.

One of Plautus's many jibes at the frequent suspensions of payment on the part of Roman bankers. What gate is meant in the second line? The gate of the circus, says Ussing. Whither, then, did the hare run so fast? Into the arena? This would be to meet his foes, the dogs: for surely the hare was enlarged for a coursing match. Or away from the circus, outwards? This would be prevented, and the spectators would not see it, even if it did occur. I suggest that the hare was carried in a cage or hamper into the middle of the arena, and enlarged there for the course: and I read ex sporta. The sporta was a box or hamper of wicker-work used for various purposes, and doubtless of various sizes: fishing-baskets for instance were called sportae: fowls were fattened shut up in sportae, so tightly shut in, as only to be able to exert their beaks to peck their food: a fragment of Sallust tells us that on some occasion unknown to us dogs were let down from walls in sportae: though in this passage it has been proposed to read panes for canes without the slightest warrant. Acidalius was doubtless right in reading in Merc. 5. 4. 28, Iam obsecro hercle habete vobis cum sportis cum fiscina where the mss. give the utterly unintelligible porcis. 'Take and keep her baskets and hamper!' the metaphor being perhaps from the sale of a donkey or mule.

POENULUS, 3. 1. 5 seqq.

Átque equidem hercle dedita opera amicos fugitavi senes :
Scíbam aetate tárdiores, métui meo amorí moram.
Néquiquam hos procós mi elegi lóripedes tardíssimos.

No one seems to know what procos means in vs. 3. It seems strange that porcos has not been suggested: 'these lazy hogs.'

POENULUS, 3. 4. 13.

AG. Vidistis, leno quom aúrum accepit? AD. Vídimus.

AG. Eum vos meum esse servom scitis. AD. Scivimus.

AG. Rem advorsus populi † saepe leges? AD. Scivimus.

For the almost certainly corrupt saepe Ritschl proposed fieri, which Goetz accepts. Much nearer and much more likely to be corrupted would be coepi, infinitive passive of coepio, coepere, a form which I have not met elsewhere. Men. 5. 5. 57, neque pugnans neque ego lites coepio. Ter. Ad. 3. 3. 44, Prius olfecissem quam ille quidquam coeperet. Pers. 1. 3. 41, Lubido extemplo coepere est convivium.

TRINUMMUS, 3. 3. 3.

Namque hércle honeste fieri ferme nón potest

Ut eám perpetiar íre in matrimónium

Sine dóte, quum eius rém penes me habeám domi.

Ferme is quite wrong. Ferme is used in Plautus in these collocations: Ferme biennium: nemo ferme: haud ferme solet: ferme ut quisque rem adcurat suam sic ei procedunt post principia: aetas acta est ferme: for ferme familiariter, Trin. 2. 2. 54, firme et familiariter is read from A, which has ferme et. None of these support the extraordinary use of ferme above: it is probable that the true reading is per me. 'It cannot be done honourably if I can prevent it.'

POENULUS, 1. 1. 1 seqq.

This passage is given in Geppert's text as follows:

AGOR. Saepe égo res multas tibi mandavi, Milphio, dubias egenas inopiosas consili;

quas tu sapienter docte et cordate et cate

mihi reddidisti opiparas opera tua.

quibus pro beneficiis fateor deberi tibi et libertatem et multas grandes gratias.

MIL. Scitumst, per tempus obuiam si est uerbum uetus.

nam tuae blanditiae mihi sunt, quod dici solet, gerrae germanae, edepol λῆποι λῆποι meri.

nunc mihi blandidicus es: heri in tergo meo

tris facile corios contrivisti bubulos.

Here the slave Milphio, vexed at his master's empty praise with nothing substantial accompanying it, says he has a proverb, for that is a regular use of verbum in Plautus, which will express what he thinks. But in the ordinary reading no proverb is there, but an awkward and common-place line, where the proverb ought to come: gerrae germanae edepol λῆροι λῆροι meri, which is about as far from the mss. as a line can possibly be. The mss. give for the latter part of the verse:

that is to say, without the alteration of a letter: gerrae germanae: αἱ δὲ κολλῦραι λύραι, that is, 'loaves are lyres.' 'Give me the loaf: I can do without the flattery.' Does edepol occur so seldom in Plautus that the scribes of the Palatine mss. were puzzled by it and changed it to haedecol? If so, what idea did they attach to this remarkable word that they unanimously substituted for it? The assonance of κολλῦραι with λύραι is characteristic of proverbs, as for instance, in the French proverbs: "songes mensonges," "qui terre a, guerre a."

This reading is, I am pleased to see, adopted by Ussing. In the edition of the Poenulus by Messrs. Goetz and Loewe, 1884, after this conjecture was published, the line is given from Ritschl's ms. notes:

Gerrae germanae hercle et collyrae escariae, which the reader is at liberty to adopt if he chooses.

PSEUDOLUS, 1. 3. 117.

Quid ais quantum terra tegit hominum periurissime?

For tegit, which is the reading of the Palatine mss., A is said to have tetigit. Hence Goetz reads terram tetigit; but though this might suit a man let down from the clouds by a golden rope, would only mean in ordinary Latin, 'came to land by sea': cf. terram tetigimus, Amph. 1. 1. 48. The mss. nearly always blunder in tetulit, the archaic perfect of fero (see Amph. 2. 2. 101, 168), and terra tetulit is, beyond the shadow of a doubt, the true reading here. Cf. Hor. Sat. 1. 5. 41, animae, qualis neque candidiores Terra tulit. Id. 2. 2. 92, Hos utinam inter Heroas natum tellus me prima tulisset.

POENULUS, 1. 2. 31.

Soror cogita amabo item nos perhiberi
 Quasi salsa muriatica esse autumantur
 Sine omni lepore et † sine suavitate.

The metre is Bacchiac. Without touching on the corruptions in the first two verses, it may be remarked that the third should run :

Sine ómni lepóre et suavi suavitáte.

Compare Pseud. 3. 2. 9, cenam conditam dato Hodie atque suavi suavitate condiam.

RUDENS, 3. 6. 21.

PLES. Ego hunc scelestum in ius rapiam exulem.
 Age, ambula in ius.

Plesidippus states his intention of dragging Labrax into court, to force him to make formal restitution of Palaestra and Ampelisca whom he had carried off. Such an action in Greek would be called ἐξούλης δίκη. Harpocration, p. 75. 23, ἐξούλης ὄνομα δίκης ἥν ἐπάγουσιν οἱ φάσκοντες ἐξείργεσθαι τῶν ἰδίων κατὰ τῶν ἐξειργόντων. No words could describe the case of Plesidippus vs. Labrax more accurately. Harpocration refers to the Πόαστραι of the comic poet Phrynichus for the word ἐξούλης. Aristides, 2. 133, quoted by Kock, Frag. Com. Graec., vol. 3, p. 524, has the remarkable words, εἰ δεῖ καὶ μῦθον λέγειν δέδοικα ἐγὼ μὴ καὶ ταῖς γραῦσιν ἐξούλης ὀφλεῖν φῆ τις ἀνὴρ κωμικός : meaning 'old women will sue us for wrongful possession if we tell stories.' Plautus not uncommonly translates technical Greek terms : so he has ananceao, Rud. 2. 3. 33. dica (abl. of dica, 'an action') may have fallen out at the end of the line under -diam which ends the previous line. I propose to write Ego hunc scelestum in ius rapiam ἐξούλης dica.

TRIN. 2. 4. 196 seqq.

Effugiet ex urbe, ubi erunt factae nuptiae :
 Ibit †istac aliquo in maxumam malam crucem Latrocinatum, aut in Asiam aut in Ciliciam.

No remedy for the deep corruption in istac has been found.

Statim, the conjecture of Brix, will not do. Statim (see note on Amph. 1. 1. 84) never means anything in Plautus but 'standing still.' I conjecture we should read stlata: stlata was a sort of ship. In the glossary of Philoxenus we have stlata: πειρατικοῦ σκάφους εἶδος. Now this glossary contains many explanations of Plautine words. It was in this glossary Scaliger found favea: παιδίσκη: whence he restored favea in Mil. 3. 1. 202. And it seems that when the gloss writer calls stlata a 'piratical sort of vessel' he very likely had this passage before him, naturally mistaking latrocinatum to mean 'to carry on piracy,' a meaning it often had in later times. Its meaning here is 'to take service as a mercenary.' For the proposed derivations of stlata see Mayor's note on stlataria purpura, Juv. 7. 134. It probably meant a vessel for trafficking with foreign ports. This conjecture suits critical laws: for l and i, c and t are regularly interchanged in mss.

STICHUS, 5. 2. 21.

Volo éluamus hódie peregrina ómnia.

Relinque: Athenas nunc colamus: sequere me.

It is impossible that this passage can be sound. Relinque must have an accusative: and if we punctuate after hodie, eluamus in its turn wants an accusative; and such a phrase as eludere peregrina is without parallel. Stichus and Sagarinus, slaves, are making cheap preparations for a banquet, as far as their means will allow them, pro opibus nostris (5. 4. 8). The commendation of Athens agrees with this, for Attic banquets were proverbially meagre (Lynceus, ap. Athen. 4. 131. 6). I propose therefore:

Nolo hélluemus hódie: peregrina ómnia

Relinque: Athenas núnc colamus: séquere me.

Helluare would be the naturally Plautine form for helluari: see note on Amph. 3. 2. 3. The meaning then will be: 'I vote we don't gormandize to-day: no foreign fashions for us: neat Attic fare!' Helluemus would be written heluemus; the single l is a common mode of spelling in mss.: on the omission of the aspirate the change to eluamus would naturally follow.

TRUCULENTUS, 2. 3. 10-13.

AST. Licet. DI. Aúdin etiam? AST. Quid vis? DI. Di me pérduint,
Qui te revocavi : non tibi dicebam : i modo.
AST. Quid me revocabas, improbe nihilique homo, Quae tibi [vox] mille passuum peperit moram.

So Spengel, and nearly so Geppert. But the true reading of the last line is clearly :

Vae tibi ! mi mille passum pepererit moram.

Passum is a dissyllable as in Men. i. 2. 64. There is no vox in the MSS. Quae is Vae, (Q)uae, and mi fell out before mille. For the future perfect pepererit = pariet see note on commutavero, Amph. Prol. 53.

TRUCULENTUS, 2. 6. 54-59 (536 ed. Schoell).

The soldier is giving presents, which he has brought from foreign parts, to his ungrateful mistress.

STR. Méa voluptas, ádtuli eccam pállulam ex Phrygiá tibi, Tene tibi. PHR. Hocin mihi ob labores tantos tantillum dari !
STR. Perii hercle ego miser: iam mi auro contra constat filius.
Etiam nunc me nihili pendit. purpuram ex Sarra tibi †Attuli tuas Ponto amoenas : tene tibi voluptas mea.
PHR. Accipe hoc. abducite intus hinc e conspectu Suras.

I have written the above passage as it has been emended by various critics, save in one place, which I have obelized. Phrygia is a correction of Kampmann's for pari gra of the MSS. Ex Sarra, 'from Tyre,' is an emendation of Jos. Scaliger for exarat, and that great scholar never made a happier hit. We come now to the obelized words which I have given according to the MS. reading :

Attuli tuas Ponto amoenas.

I propose to read, adding one letter, and taking away one, in the MSS. :

Attuli, et vas, Ponto maenas. tene tibi voluptas mea.

The maena was a small fish, which was preserved and much eaten at Rome, and probably was thought more of in early times than it was in the time of Martial. Those from the Pontus may have been a superior kind. Now vas, which is actually in tuas of the mss., is the word used for the jar in which such fish were kept. Cf. Juv. 7. 119: Quod vocis pretium? siccus petasunculus et vas Pelamidum.

The Hellespont from Homer downwards was famous for fish. Hermippus, enumerating the products of the various countries of the world, says, ἐκ δ' Ἑλλησπόντου σκόμβρους καὶ πάντα ταρίχη. One of the commonest proverbs among the many which the ancients used to express the idea which we express by the saying 'coals to Newcastle' was ἰχθὺς εἰς Ἑλλησπόντον. Persius (5. 134) advises an idle young fellow to take to importing sprats or sardines from the Pontus: saperdas advehe Ponto.

ADDENDA AND CORRIGENDA.

Prol. 17. Professor Sonnenschein remarks on venio—venerim that in early Latin the distinction between the co-ordinate question (parataxis) and the subordinate question (hypotaxis) had not been evolved.

38. animum quae loquor advortite. ea only, not ad ea, as I have inadvertently stated, is omitted. The construction of animum advortere with an accusative is Plautine, as the same construction of animadvortere is, of course, quite classical.

45. architectus (architecton). Professor Sonnenschein calls attention to Πλούτων as a parallel form to Πλούτος, Ar. Plut. 727.

104. For pater meus read mēus pater with Bothe and Fleckeisen. The latter is the usual order, and the scansion is simplified by adopting it here.

1. 1. 102. ad nos is for purposes of scansion one word. This line therefore is no exception to the rule that the fourth foot of an iambic septenarius or octonarius must be an iambus, when the fourth foot ends with a word.

1. 1. 121. Critical Note. Dele “or fulguritas.”

1. 1. 129. invitavit. The only passage in Plautus where invitare has not this meaning is Trin. 1. 1. 5:

Invitus, ni me invitet ut faciat fides.

1. 1. 139. meticulosus. The mss. here and Most. 5. 1. 52 seem to point to metuculosus, which LG adopt here, and Sonnenschein Most. 1. c. B has here metu culosus, D metuculosus, and in Most. 1. c. DC have the u form.

1. 1. 139. Hem should be in italics.

1. 1. 140. de umero volt. This is Leo's reading. The MSS. have :

Illic homo hoc denuo vult pallium detexere,

Read with LG :

Illic homo hodie hoc denuo volt pallium detexere.

1. 1. 155. pugnos edet : 'shall get a bellyful.'

1. 1. 170. ut primum domes. Critical Note : "Prius is intrinsically a better reading than ut primum"; add, "save on metrical grounds; the diiambic ending would be licentious."

1. 1. 175. ut vectus huc sum. Compare also Merc. 2. 3. 37: Per mare ut vectu's, nunc oculi terram mirantur tui, where the meaning "since" is quite out of place. Professor Sonnenschein refers me to Pseud. 2. 2. 66, nam ut lassus veni de via me volo curare, which is quite decisive, and Most. 1. 3. 111, ut speculum tenuisti, metuo ne olant argentum manus. The meaning of ut in all these passages is not 'since,' but 'as is natural considering that.'

1. 1. 290. Add tergus masc., As. 2. 2. 53, familiarem tergum.

1. 1. 295. non obtempero : see Prof. J. E. B. Mayor, Class. Review, vol. i. p. 58.

1. 1. 297. si incendas ... poteris. Professor Sonnenschein contributes the following important note : "'Should you mount the chariot of Jove, you will scarcely be able to escape misfortune' : a form of speech which is equally good Latin, Greek (ἐὰν with subj.—fut. indic.) and English. It is not only common in Plautus (Amph. 450" (this passage), "Asin. 414, Epid. 5. 14, Bacch. 1004, 1172, Poen. 3. 4. 19; 5. 2. 125, etc.), and Terence (Ad. 753, Phorm. 229, Hec. 429, etc.), but also found in Lucretius (1. 570; 655; 2. 547; 481; 3. 929-948), Cic. pro Quint. 68, Verr. 2. 167, Tusc. 1. 29, 5, 102?), Sallust Jug. 42. 5; Hor. Od. 3. 3. 7; Virg. Georg. 2. 54 (faciet with MSS.), Aen. 1. 374, 6. 583, and other writers. On this point hariosantur grammatici. I have attempted a better treatment in my Latin Syntax, § 501."

1. 2. 15. This diaeresis seems scarcely possible. Perhaps :

Prius abis quam lectus ubi tu fuisti concaluit locus.

2. 2. 57. rēvortimini. The reference to rēclusit should be Capt. 4. 4. 10. Add As. 2. 2. 112:

Illest ipsus: iām ego rēcurro hūc: tu hunc intereā tene, where, if we recognise this archaic lengthening, there will be no occasion to alter a letter.

2. 2. 177. ad mortem dedit, 'brought me to death's door.'
Cf. As. 3. 2. 28, Ubi saepe ad languorem tua duritia dederis octo Validos lictores. Ibid. 2. 4. 20, Iussin in splendorem dari bullas?

2. 2. 202. quo = ita ut, 'in such sort as to make me unchaste.'

2. 2. 204. ēs. It is best to write umbra es, etc., not umbra 's, as the long quantity indicates, and this is now generally done. Cf. As. 3. 1. 8, satis dicacula es amatrix.

3. 2. 1. durare: cf. the pun in Asin. 5. 2. 57. ART. Non queo durare. PAR. Si non didicisti fullonicam non mirandumst.

4. 3. 14. certumst, intro rumpam in aedis. Two friends ask may not rumpam be subjunctive. No: compare Merc. 2. 4. 4:

Certumst, ibo ad medicum, atque ibi me toxico morti dabo.
For other instances of the idiom, see Aul. 4. 6. 10, 15. stabile est should have been mentioned along with the other formulae, meaning the same as certum est, l. l. 111, cf. Bacch. 3. 4. 25.

CLASSICS.

ELEMENTARY CLASSICS.

18mo, Eighteenpence each.

THIS SERIES FALLS INTO TWO CLASSES—

(1) First Reading Books for Beginners, provided not only with Introductions and Notes, but with Vocabularies, and in some cases with Exercises based upon the Text.

(2) Stepping-stones to the study of particular authors, intended for more advanced students who are beginning to read such authors as Terence, Plato, the Attic Dramatists, and the harder parts of Cicero, Horace, Virgil, and Thucydides.

These are provided with Introductions and Notes, but no Vocabulary. The Publishers have been led to provide the more strictly Elementary Books with Vocabularies by the representations of many teachers, who hold that beginners do not understand the use of a Dictionary, and of others who, in the case of middle-class schools where the cost of books is a serious consideration, advocate the Vocabulary system on grounds of economy. It is hoped that the two parts of the Series, fitting into one another, may together fulfil all the requirements of Elementary and Preparatory Schools, and the Lower Forms of Public Schools.
